MARGARET McCARTHY

The cheery voice of dark-eyed "Peggy" McCarthy, 10, of Somerville, was stilled forever by a fiend who choked her to death and hid her body in Cambridge. Her missing shoes may solve the mystery and pin the guilt on her slayer.

WHEN MUTINEERS seize a ship, throw the officers overboard, and start for themselves, they remember too late that navigation is necessary, and often would wish their officers alive again.

So, in Cuba, you read that the gallant "top sergeants" and others of lesser rank, that have seized the government, feel the need of more experienced hands.

Older army officers have been asked to come back, and it is even suggested that De Cespedes, deposed President No. 2, may be invited to take charge again.

In the old fable, the feet that rebelled against the head and stomach, because the latter

Heavy rains during the night and threatening cloudy weather all morning made the racing strip a quagmire. The sun broke out shortly after noon, however, and by the time the feature race, the $2500 added New Hampshire Handicap, went to the post, the track was in good condition.

The first race got under way promptly at 2:15 o'clock and as the sun dried out the racing strip each of the eight events on the card

Armed men force way into home of U. S. Consul Alexander Knox at Cienfuegos, ignoring protests that the consulate is United States territory. The intruders were searching for arms, Ambassador Welles reports.

Washington, Sept. 9 (AP)—Grave concern as to how much longer present conditions in Cuba can continue without disorders was felt today by American officials.

While latest official advices said no lives had been lost, the state department said frankly it did not know how much agitation and disorder might be taking place in the interior.

At Havana, where American warships lay alert and ready in the harbor, soon to be joined by the battleship Mississippi from Cardenas under orders today, Cuban governmental activities appeared at a standstill.

The navy at the same time ordered still another destroyer, the Reuben James, to proceed immediately from Norfolk, Virginia, into the Cuban zone.

The crux was the question of how many days or hours a nation of 4,000,000 people can get along without more of a government and avoid a blow-up, especially with its military element divided.

Secretary Hull, with relief apparent in his voice, told newspaper men that Ambassador Sumner Welles at Havana had informed him 500 army officers massed at the national hotel against efforts of the rank and file to send them

Two So. Boston Boys Killed by Train as They Flee Orchard

Two South Boston boys were killed almost instantly by an inbound New Haven train opposite Savin Hill Beach today while running from a yard in Dillingham st., Dorchester, where they had picked up a few fallen pears.

The dead:

JOHNSON, PETER, 6, of 26 Mercer st.
COUGHLIN, WILLIAM, 11 of 50 Telegraph st.

Vincent Johnson 11, Peter's brother, just crossed the tracks in time and saved himself by rolling down the 15-foot railroad embankment. He became hysterical at the sight of his dead brother and was treated in Station 11 before being taken home.

According to Vincent, he, his brother and Coughlin had picked up a few pears from a yard in Dillingham st., and in the belief they were being chased by the owner of the house adjoining, ran toward the tracks.

SEE TRAIN TOO LATE

Before they realized it, he said, they saw a train coming from Boston, and in their eagerness to get across the tracks, failed to look the other way. Too late, Vincent saw the Plymouth-Boston train bearing down upon them. He shouted to his brother and Coughlin and then plunged down the bank.

Peter was dead when members of the train crew reached him. Coughlin died before an ambulance reached the scene. Dr. William H. Gately, of South Weymouth, a passenger on the train, ran back to aid the boys and stayed until the ambulance arrived.

There were about 100 passengers on the train, but only a handful knew what had happened. The train was in charge of conductor Anthony Enos and was piloted by Engineer S. Crawshaw. When it was evident that nothing could be done for the boys, the train proceeded after a five-minute delay to Boston.

7 BOSTON CLUBS LOSE CHARTERS

Charters of seven Boston clubs have been voided by Secretary of State Frederic Cook because they have moved their quarters from the addresses contained in the original charters.

Cook notified Commr. Hultman of this fact today, and he in turn, through Supt. Martin King, passed the word to captains of the various police districts.

Cook's action is seen as a death blow to the charter racket whereby charters of defunct clubs have been used by speakeasy owners in order to avoid police raids.

The clubs which will be closed by police if they continue to operate now that their charters have been voided are: Amplar Social Club; Boston Arena Athletic Club, Inc., North End; Cosmos Club, South End; Crawford Club, North End; North Shore Social and Athletic Club; South Cove Social Club, North End, and the Unity Social Club of Boston, South End.

'Peggy Such a Good Girl,' Mother Cries

By PEGGY DOYLE

"Because she was such a good little thing, so anxious to please," little Margaret McCarthy, 10-year-old Somerville girl, is dead today, up to the time this is written believed to be the victim of as fiendish a crime as is listed in the history of Middlesex county.

While the body of the child, found in a clump of bushes at Hammond and Gorham sts., Cambridge, today, after she had been missing from home since yesterday noon is being examined to determine the cause of her death, her heart-broken mother, hysterically, blames herself for allowing her to go on the errand from which she never returned.

$1000 Reward Planned as Police Organize Man Hunt

Victim of a fiendish kidnaper and strangler, 10-year-old Margaret McCarthy of 9 Marion st., Somerville, missing since yesterday noon when she went merrily on an errand for her mother, was found slain today in Cambridge.

Her bruised body was discovered in a clump of elderberry and wild raspberry bushes at Hammond and Gorham sts., near the Harvard Divinity school.

Medical Examiner David C. Dow, after an autopsy, made the following official announcement:

"The cause of death was asphyxia by pressure being applied to the neck. The child died by violence. She was choked to death.

"Further examination of the body is pending.

"We are not sure of the motive.

"The child was dead 12 to 18 hours at the time of the autopsy (early this afternoon).

"There was no way to determine from the condition of the clothing how long the child lay at the spot where her body was found.

"There was no way of telling whether she died at that scene or at some other place.

SCRATCHES ON THE BODY

"There were superficial scratches at different parts of the body that may have been caused by twigs. The injury at the back of the head may have been caused by falling or being struck. I am inclined to think the former.

"A final report will be made to Dist. Atty. Bishop Monday."

He was asked if there was any sign that the child had been attacked.

"That comes under the head of further examination," said Dr. Dow, "An attempt may have been made. There are marks which might have been caused by her struggle to escape her captor."

ARMY GUARDS CUBANS TRYING TO FORM NEW CABINET

WELLES PREVENTS CLASH OF TWO FACTIONS IN HOTEL

back to their posts had left the building without bloodshed.

This relieved a situation which was particularly threatening because the officers were unofficially reported to have said they would sell their lives dearly if attacked, and because Ambassador Welles and his family make their home at the National Hotel and other Americans recently were concentrated there.

While President Roosevelt maintained a watch and other arms of the government stood ready for instant movement, the navy's new orders placed an ever-strengthening cordon of vessels around Cuba.

The Mississippi, with 12 fourteen-inch guns prominent in its armament and carrying more than 900 bluejackets and 80 marines, was directed to take the anchorage in Havana harbor vacated last night by the heavy cruiser Indianapolis.

Carrying Secretary Swanson, the Indianapolis was headed today toward the Canal Zone, but could be turned back at any time.

The navy sent the destroyer Overton from the Isle of Pines to a reported trouble spot at Cienfuegos, on the southern Cuban coast, where a group of rebels forced their way into the home of the American consul, seeking arms.

The destroyer J. Fred Talbott was due today at Manzanillo, on the southeastern coast, near the tip of the island.

Meanwhile, the fleet coast guard cutter Unalga was directed to concentrate its activities at Antilla, on the northeastern coast, where Sec. Hull said yesterday Americans were reported in danger.

President Roosevelt regards the situation as still tense. He does not feel the various factions warring for control haveyet set up anything like a government chosen by the people and capable of maintaining permanent order. He deferred start of a yacht trip scheduled for the week-end.

Junta Attempts to Gain Control

Havana, Sept. 9 (INS)—Entrenched behind the bayonets of its army, the revolutionary government of Cuba today maintained order on the island, while striving desperately to organize an administration acceptable to the United States.

The junta, or "governing board of five," placed in power by the revolt of army sergeants, continued to administer the government in the face of countless opposition rumors.

Former Secretary of War Horacio Ferrer, acting as intermediary between army officers and the new radical government, made a formal request that Dr. Carlos Manuel De Cespedes be reinstated as provisional president.

Dr. Ferrer told the ruling junta that the army officers were unwilling to return to duty unless Dr. De Cespedes was reinstated "with ample power to reorganize the cabinet to make it representative of all political factions."

U. S. CONSULATE INVADED

A group of 25 armed men forced their way into the residence of Alexander Knox, American consul at Cienfuegos, on Thursday, United States Ambassador Sumner Welles revealed today.

Knox and his wife were present at the time, but no one was harmed, Welles said. The Consul protested to the invaders on the grounds the consulate is American soil, but his pleas went unheeded.

The men presumably were searching for arms, Welles declared.

No protest on behalf of the United States has yet been made to the revolutionary junta here. Welles declined to say whether one was contemplated.

U. S. SUGAR MILLS SEIZED

A telegram from the vice-consul at Antilla, at the extreme eastern end of the island, reported the sugar mills at Tacajo and San German, American owned, had been seized by laborers. The official report said the Tacajo manager was being held prisoner in his home.

The commissary department and other properties of the Baguanos Sugar Mill seized Thursday, were looted.

The American embassy meanwhile explained that the only sailors or marines coming ashore were parties commissioned to purchase supplies.

Two prisoners were shot dead in an attempt to break out of Guantanamo jail, Santiago. Two others were wounded. Officials said the attempted break was without political significance.

The action of former army and navy officers in repudiating the new revolutionary leadership led to a dramatic situation. They had been meeting in the National hotel where American tourists and Ambassador Welles have been under close guard of veterans of Havana post of the American Legion.

OFFICERS DEFY JUNTA

Several companies of heavily armed soldiers swooped down on the hotel and, with machine guns, surrounded it.

Fulgencio Batista, one-time sergeant and now commander of the army, gave the officers until 10 a. m. today to obey his orders that they return to their posts, from which they were evicted Monday. They emphatically answered:

"No. We do not recognize this government. Let the commissioners get out."

The officers said they were prepared to sell their lives dearly if efforts were made to arrest them or send them back to duty at the point of guns. However, under an agreement, the terms of which were not made known, the officers left the hotel.

Early today soldiers started to search the hotel, and the dissenting officers for arms, but desisted when Ambassador Sumner Welles intervened.

Welles, a resident in the hotel, was in the lobby when the soldiers arrived and persuaded them to abandon their purpose.

Opposition to the Junta by the ABC drew a dozen prominent citizens from key positions, topped by Francisco Guardiolo, who had been appointed sub-secretary of the treasury.

The position of the Junta was somewhat strengthened by the action of Mexico in extending its virtual recognition. The Junta expected a dozen other Latin-American countries to follow Mexico's lead and proclaim recognition within the next 48 hours.

The Junta, however, was striving desperately for American recognition, but realizes that Ambassador Sumner Welles is blocking it and is keeping emissaries running to him.

Havana Capital in Name Only

Havana, Sept. 9—Havana is no longer capital of Cuba except in name. Any government here will not be recognized except verbally throughout the island.

One Cuban leader said today:

"We can beat intervention as we beat Machado. From now on the workers will rule Cuba, and 80 per cent of the army is with us.

"If we call a general strike and all Cuba is starving while American marines rule Cuba, what will Spanish-America think?

"Thus, what may be decided in the presidential palace in Havana is without effect; disorder is likely to last for months, intervention or no intervention."

BATISTA GIVES PLEDGE TO U. S.

Copyright, 1933, International News Service

Havana, Sept. 9 (INS)—Col. Fulgencio Batista, who led Cuba's revolution of army sergeants, today pledged the safety of every American and every dollar of American property on the island.

He told International News Service the army was ready to guarantee this.

"How soon do you expect a government along the lines of a president and a cabinet?" he was asked.

"I believe a steadfast government is now in the process of formation," he replied.

Asked whether, as leader of the revolution, he guaranteed the lives and property of Americans and other foreigners, Batista responded immediately:

"Absolutely. We are providing that guarantee now that there is peace and quiet throughout the island. There hasn't been as much peace in normal times as there is now."

Maine is he 26th state to ballot on the repeal question.

On Tuesday three other states—Colorado, Maryland and Minnesota—will register their will on the question. By Nov. 7 at least 39 states will have voted.

Thirty-six states must vote in affirmative before repeal becomes effective.

Probably the only police station in the world that can boast 1000 persons clamored to get in was the station in Everett today. As a matter of fact the crowd was so large and their desire to get in so great that police officials had to use the rear entrance of the station.

BROKER'S WIFE ADMITS TRYST IN HOTEL

Claire Windsor's Counsel Wrings Intimacy Confession

Los Angeles, Sept. 9 (US)—After she filed her $100,000 alienation of affections suit against Claire Windsor, golden haired film and stage actress, Mrs. Marian Read returned temporarily on several occasions to her ex-husband, Alfred C. Read, Jr., she admitted to the jury.

On the verge of tears Mrs. Read made her admissions under the rapid-fire cross-examination of Defense Atty. Wilbur Pierce.

WITNESS UNEASY

"In the interests of justice," Judge J. P. Sproul ruled the defense had the right to cross-examine Mrs. Read upon circumstances which occurred after she filed her heart balm suit. And it was then that Pierce, by the manner of his questioning, began a slashing attack upon Mrs. Read.

"Did you ever meet your husband privately after you filed this suit against Miss Windsor on March 29, 1932?" Pierce began.

Color mounted into Mrs. Read's cheeks. She shifted nervously on the witness stand.

"No," she replied, "that is not true."

She said she thought he was sincere when he delivered to her all the letters and telegrams and photographs he had received from Miss Windsor. These documents, which now form the basis for the alienation suit, were turned over to her lawyer before she accompanied Read to a hotel, Mrs. Read said.

TRICKED INTO TRYST

She testified Read actually "tricked" her into going to the hotel and that he had a friend walk into the room.

"After that trickery, which was played to render my testimony worthless in this suit, I wouldn't think of going back to Al," Mrs. Read said.

"Didn't he come to you many times after that and throw himself at your feet and beseech you to take him back?" Pierce asked.

"No," she replied, "but he did come later in May and kidnaped me at the point of a .38 caliber revolver. He took me at that time to Silver Stream Lodge, some miles from Oakland, with some friends of his, and later he was arrested for kidnaping me," Mrs. Read said.

Isi't it true that you had intimate relations with your husband at that time?"

"Yes," Mrs. Read admitted.

M'CARTHY GIRL FOURTH CHILD KILLING

Nellie Keras, Salvatore Damato and Henry McMahon Others

Three other brutal murders of children in the Boston radius in recent years were recalled today with discovery of the body of 10-year-old Margaret McCarthy of Somerville, believed victim of a "fiend slayer."

Most recent of the three was the killing of Nellie Keras, 9, who vanished last Christmas day from her home in Norwood. Her body was found in the cellar of her home. The Keras slaying was solved with the trial and conviction of a Turk named Ahmed Osman, who was sentenced to death.

Two other child slayings in recent years stand on the records as "unsolved." One was that of Salvatore Damora, 10, of Stillman st., North End. The Damora boy's body was found on the Pines river marshes in Saugus, in July, 1929. He had been strangled to death, victim of kidnapers who levied $5000 tribute on the child's family with promise of his release.

In July, 1922, the body of Henry P. McMahon, 12, of Salem, was found in Half Mile pasture, not far from his home. The boy's skull had been crushed. Two rocks found near the body were the instruments of death. Like the Damora murder, the slayer has escaped justice.

The killing of the Keras child was a particularly fiendish crime. Wrapped in a burlap bag, the girl's body was found buried under kindling in a woodbin. Two Turks, not related, but named Osman, were arrested. Both broke under police grilling. But each accused the other of the crime.

Ahmed Osman was convicted and Ali Osman was freed. The slayer now is awaiting execution.

Investigation of the Damore boy's murder resulted in a dozen arrests. But police met a handicap in the family's fear of more visitations on the Damore clan if aid were given the search. Thec rime went not only unsolved, but without a positive motive being established for the kidnaping and killing of the child.

The McMahon boy was lured to a desolate marsh in Salem on promises by a foreign-appearing man of a new bathing suit. A state-wide roundup of known degenerates developed no conviction. One suspect, Tonio Costello, was released after futile days of questioning.

CUBAN LOTTERY KILLER BARRED

New York, Sept. 9 (INS)—Alfonso Cassas, a student, chosen by lottery from his fellow members of the ABC, Cuban secret society, to come to America and murder Ludao, Machado's "butcher," was prevented from landing here today by immigration officers when he arrived, a stowaway, aboard the Ward liner, Morro Castle. He had been discovered at sea by the ship's officers and thrown into the brig.

He would have stayed there had not American girl passengers heard the romantic story that a young revolutionary hero, who looked like the late Rudy Valentino, actually was a prisoner aboard their ship. This was too much. They pleaded with the captain and they got him out.

In borrowed flannels he appeared above deck, forgot his role of appointed murderer and met the demands of the ladies by dancing a wicked rhumba with palpitating partners.

Quarry Dragged for Missing Youth

In the belief that he was drowned while swimming in Cashman's Quarry, West Quincy, the body of James A. Whelan, 23, of Wentworth st., Dorchester, was sought there today by Quincy police equipped with dragnets.

Whelan's clothing and an uneaten lunch were found at the edge of the quarry and Whelan's family reported him missing since he went swimming yesterday morning.

Killer Bailey Finds Jail Treatment 'Cruel'

Oklahoma City, Sept. 9 (AP)—Harvey Bailey, Southwest desperado charged with murder and kidnaping of Charles Urschel, is, in the words of his attorney, James Mathers, a victim of "cruel and inhuman treatment," in the jail.

"Confinement in a dark, solitary cell.

"Large handcuffs around each wrist and his hands separated by a steel bar 16 inches long so fixed that he can eat only with difficulty.

"Legs shackled together and his person chained by large, heavy and painful irons to fixed objects in his cell.

"No chair and he is forced to appear in his underwear.

Herbert K. Hyde, United States district attorney, commented:

"The government is holding no pink tea down there. We haven't any Sunday school boy in custody, either. We are holding a desperate criminal."

The Buyers' Crusade

THE great Buy Now movement is in full swing. From one end of the country to the other, in cities and hamlets, back on the farms, up in the hills, along the coasts, in the most out of the way places, the call has been heard to make this month of September memorable as the starting point for the MARCH OF THE BUYERS.

It is a MARCH OF SUPPORT to our already reviving trade—a MARCH OF RE-ENFORCEMENT to our patriotic and enlightened President, who has given his countrymen such a strong, clear lead to self-rescue and recovery from the trade depression that has weighed them down.

How wonderful it is—a great concerted movement of a mighty people responding to the call of duty with willing mind and the perfect heart to serve.

Have you ever stopped to think how entirely and exclusively the strength of the United States, its defensive strength, its recuperative power lie in the body of its citizenship—in the noble company of sober, moral, diligent, thoughtful men and women who make up our great population?

IT is in the people as a whole that the patience, judgment and vigor of America have their roots.

The American people made America! And it is the PEOPLE who alone can save it in a period of stress or emergency.

Not the ambitious leader. Not the noisy politician. Not the vain celebrity of the moment who thrusts himself clamorously upon public notice. These self-centered figures have no significance at all in a time of crisis, except only as they may succeed in catching and interpreting the deep undertones of the thought and lives of the people.

The foundations of constitutional democracy were not laid by Cromwell, as is sometimes said. But by the plain russet-coated tradesmen and artisans who made up his armies. They fought and prayed with equal fervor and by diligence, discipline and sobriety, became invincible.

It was the embattled farmer of Lexington who "fired the shot heard 'round the world;" and in a later period of our history, it was again the plain people who came to the country's rescue, and saved the Union itself from destruction.

How they rallied to Lincoln's support; they knew what they fought for and they loved what they knew. Do you remember the plain and homely note of cheer they sent to the President—"We are coming, Father Abraham, three hundred thousand strong!"

It is the plain people—you all and us—to whom the country looks now to put this national recovery effort over.

We can do it! And only we can do it!

DO you realize that eighty per cent of the buying power in the United States is made up of the people whose annual income is less than eighteen hundred dollars?

The rich man, the big buyer, does not amount to so much in the light of this great fact—does he? He has his place and his usefulness, but he does not compare, in value to the country, with the plain and simple American who outnumbers him, outworks him and outmeasures him as a contributor and source of strength to the nation's well-being.

Come, then, fellow Americans—sober fathers, thrifty mothers, sturdy sons, diligent daughters—let us put this great power to work—this power, that we possess by virtue of our great number, to absorb the output and reward the labor of our industrious countrymen.

Let us use and proudly own and promptly and liberally buy the work of their brains and hands.

It will do us good. It will do them good. It will promote and make secure the happiness and prosperity of all.

IT IS A WORK FOR COUNTRY!

U. S. LABOR MEN WILL ACT IN SHOE STRIKE

'Buck Passing,' Claim of Business Men in Brockton

Washington, Sept. 9 (AP)—The National Labor Board will take action next week to effect settlement of a strike of several thousand shoe workers in Brockton, Mass.

The Brockton controversy arose from contracts between the Boot and Shoe Workers Union and Brockton shoe manufacturers, under which only union members might be employed.

Recently members of the Shoe Workers Union withdrew and joined the rival brotherhood of Shoe and Allied Craftsmen. Some of these men were discharged and others left in protest.

Because of legal questions involved, members of the board believed, an opinion will be requested from Donald Richberg, general NRA counsel.

The shoe code of competition contains a clause providing that existing contracts shall remain in force, a clause which the Brotherhood of Shoe and Allied Craftsmen is prepared to oppose at hearings next week.

The business men of Brockton appealed for administration assistance in composing the situation with telegrams to Secretary of Labor Perkins and NRA officials, complaining of lack of action and charging "buck-passing."

Merit Clause in Shoe Code Threatens Clash

Washington, Sept. 9 (AP)—A clash between shoe manufacturers and the Recovery Administration on the merit clause contained in the proposed code by the boot and shoe industry, was predicted today by employers' representatives.

Administration officials admitted telegrams from shoe manufacturers in all parts of the country were pouring in, demanding the merit clause be retained.

If the manufacturers are requested to withdraw the clause a stormy clash will be precipitated.

CODE FORCED ON COAL MEN

Washington, Sept. 9 (INS)—The iron hand of the federal government was held over bituminous coal operators today as National Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson sought to persuade the industry to accept a code of fair competition.

After a tense few hours, during which it appeared the whole campaign of the NRA might fail, there appeared a possibility of winning reluctant consent of most of the operators to the proposed code.

Bituminous operators had until 6 p. m. today to formally object to the NRA's code which shortens working hours in the mines, provides virtual compulsory arbitration of labor disputes and paves the way for price and production control.

NEW $6,000,000 BOSTON POST OFFICE DEDICATED BY FARLEY

MANY NOTABLES AT IMPRESSIVE EXERCISES

Throng Hears Gov. Ely Mayor Curley and Judge Morton

Boston's new $6,000,000 postoffice building was dedicated today by Postmaster General James A. Farley in the presence of Gov. Ely, Mayor Curley and a host of local and national leaders.

Brief but impressive exercises marked the fulfillment of a two-year dream, when Franklin M. Hull, government engineer, handed over the keys of the building to Postmaster William E. Hurley.

BARS POLITICAL TALK

Farley arrived in Boston for the dedication at 6:45 from New York, and was met at South Station by Postmaster Hurley, who escorted him and his companion, Charles S. Hand, to the Ritz-Carlton.

Neither Mayor Curley, Gov. Ely nor any of the other state politicians were on hand to greet Farley at the station. To newspaper men whom he interviewed before breakfast, he said he had nothing whatever to say on federal patronage.

"I am here to dedicate the new federal building," he said, "not to hand out federal jobs."

He refused to either confirm or deny that Mayor John J. Murphy of Somerville had been offered the post of U. S. marshal in Boston.

Not long after he reached his suite Farley's visitors, led by Mayor Curley, began to pour in. Curley was accompanied by Traffic Commissioner Joseph Conry. James Roosevelt soon joined the party, followed by Judge Emil Fuchs, owner of the Braves; Joseph A. Maynard, collector of the port and chairman of the Democratic state committee. Senator David I. Walsh arrived just as the party was about to proceed to the postoffice. Daniel Coakley, accompanied by Judge W. R. Pattangall of Maine, also called on Farley.

'BUY NOW" PRAISED

Before leaving for the dedication, Farley spoke of the National Recovery Act, and praised the "Buy in September" campaign now being carried on throughout the country by the Hearst papers.

When informed that "Buy Day," sponsored by the Boston Evening American and the Sunday Advertiser would be held next Wednesday with enrollment of nearly 200,000 children under the NRA banner and a big parade, Farley said:

"I think the idea is wonderful. It will help teach the public the most important lesson of the entire NRA campaign, namely, that consumers must buy, and must buy now, if they themselves hope to benefit by the NRA."

ELY AND CURLEY SPEAK

Escorted by a detail of police, and joined by a delegation of postoffice workers at Beacon and Park sts., Farley drove to the new federal building.

At 10:30, the dedication exercises were formally opened, with an invocation offered by Mgr. Richard J. Haberlin, vicar-general of the Archdiocese of Boston.

Brief addresses by Mayor Curley, Gov. Ely, Judge James Morton of the U. S. circuit court and Relph Adams Cram, who designed the 22-story structure, followed.

Farley opened his address by paying his respects to the Commonwealth and to the city. He then praised the Massachusetts senators and congressmen whose efforts made the new building possible.

WAR ON DEPRESSION

"In dedicating this structure," he said, "I want to emphasize that it should stand as the center of federal activities in your midst.

"We have learned that a people, 130,000,000 strong, spread over the vast area of an empire reaching from coast to coast, can only prosper by mutual regard of everyone for the rights of everyone else.

"Joined together now under the NRA, we are marshalling our forces in a war against depression and for permanent prosperity."

SEES MAINE WET

Farley will leave Boston for Portland at 6:30 p. m., where he will address a meeting at the city auditorium, sponsored by the United Repeal Association.

Speaking of repeal, Farley said he was confident that Maine would vote for repeal on Monday, and that the necessary 36 states would have ratified the 21st amendment wiping out prohibition by Nov. 7.

"In fact, I don't think a single state will be found opposed to repeal," he said.

Brighton Man Is Struck by Auto

Samuel Laserson, 31, of 41 Egremont rd., Brighton, was in St. Elizabeth's Hospital today suffering from broken ribs and bruises, as a result of being knocked down down by an auto on Commonwealth ave., Allston. Police said the machine was driven by Ward W. Dayton of Lowell ave., Newtonville.

POLICE SEIZE 200 'SLOTS'

Cambridge police seized 200 slot machines valued at $25,000 in a spectacular raid on a warehouse at Massachusetts ave., near the state armory, Cambridge, today. The raid was ordered by Dist. Atty. Warren L. Bishop.

This was the second big slot machine raid in Cambridge this week, 250 machines having been seized in the American Candy Co., Cambridge st., a few days ago.

No arrests were made today, but grand jury action against several suspects is expected next week.

According to Bishop, a truckman revealed that he had transported the mashines a month ago from a Leverett st. address. The truckman could describe the men who hired him only as "two dark complected men." Police are looking for the pair.

Postmen's Day at Floating Hospital

Boston Letter Carriers Mutual Benefit Association Day was observed today in the Boston Floating Hospital, in Ash st. For years the association has supported the hospital. There are in Boston today many men and women who owe their health to the fact that as children they were directed to the hospital by the carrier on the route.

The hospital is now better able to meet altered conditions in child health by giving on land year-round free hospital service to infants and children rather than the intensive seasonal care which used to be necessary during the summer months.

SPEND A DOLLAR AND MAKE A JOB

Bills of Costello Experts Give Cregg Surprise Jolt

Medical experts in the recent trial of Mrs. Jessie B. Costello completely reversed themselves today and reached a unanimous agreement which they forwarded to Dist. Atty. Hugh A. Cregg.

Cregg, whose head whirled in confusion during the trial as he listened to expert after expert offer contradictory testimony on every feature of Costello's death, was amazed at the reports of individual experts. Everyone of them had made a perfect diagnosis of his worth as an expert, and each billed the county for plenty.

While Cregg refused to divulge the amount each expert sought, it was learned that Dr. J. Stewart Rooney, who admitted making 50 wrong tests for poison, billed the county for $2000.

One item on his bill was for 81 hours analyzing the internal organs of Capt. Costello at $10 an hour.

Dr. Francis P. McCaCrthy, who submitted a bill to Cregg, will not be paid at all, the district attorney said. He will have to collect from the defense.

Other experts who submitted bills were Dr. George BB. McGrath, medical examiner for Suffolk County and Dr. William Boos, state toxicologist.

SKIDDING AUTO KILLS WOMAN

Lowell, Sept. 9—Mrs. Margaret Bichrest, 47, of Lisbon Falls, Me., was killed and her nephew, the Rev. Fr. John P. Bichrest, 27, of the same town, probably fatally injured when their automobile skidded and struck a tree at the Westford-Chelmsford line early today.

The wreck was discovered by a bus driver, and the couple, who had lain unnoticed for nearly two hours, were rushed in a police ambulance to St. John's Hospital here. The woman was pronounced dead and Fr. Bichrest was said to be in a critical condition. He has a fractured skull.

Police said they apparently were returning to their home from a visit to Bridgeport, Ct., when the car skidded on the wet pavement. Chelmsford police, notified by the bus driver, called the local authorities and Capt. Charles S. Sharkey sent an ambulance.

El "Slug" User Jailed

3 BODIES FOUND ON MOUNTAIN

Portland, Ore., Sept. 9 (AP)—The bodies of three Portland men, victims of the icy slopes of Mount Jefferson, were to be brought here today as the final episode in one of the most heroic searches ever conducted in the mountains of Oregon.

Davis McCamant, 37; Don Brukhart, 23, and John Thomas, 19, who attempted to scale the almost inaccessible east slope of the precipitous 10,500 foot peak Labor Day, died in a crevasse a few hundred feet below the summit. Each had suffered a broken neck, after being swept down the mountainside.

Governor Ely Keeps Operation Secret

Gov. Ely, it seemed today, is one of those who will never be accused of boring company with a long story about "my operation."

Beyond admitting a slight operation was performed at Audubon Hospital, the Governor was loath to talk about it today. And because "it was not worth mentioning" he told newspapermen he would not discuss its nature.

Even the Governor's absence from the State House for the operation had been shrouded in mystery Wednesday, so shrouded that persistent inquirers aroused the ire of his secretary, Dewitt C. De Wolfe.

Gov. Ely is "recuperating" at the home of his son, Richard Ely, Chestnut Hill rd., Chestnut Hill.

Cranberry Picking Under Police Guard

Plymouth, Sept. 9—Harvesting of cranberries in Plymouth bogs was continued under police guard today as 65 striking pickers were replaced with Plymouth welfare recipients.

The strike started several days ago and affected 15 of the largest berry bogs in the Cape district. The strikers demanded 80 cents an hour instead of 40 cents offered by the Cape Cod Cranberry Growers Association.

Bishop Dead in China

Shanghai, Sept. 9—Edward Sheehan, a bishop in the Catholic Lazarist mission at Anjen, Kiangsi province, died today of pneumonia. He was 47 and a native of Illinois.

6 U. S. Airmen Leap for Life in Fog; 3 Crack Up

New York, Sept. 9 (AP)—The perils of the skyways hold hardly a more nightmarish predicament than to be lost in a fog a mile or so above New York's canyons and skyscrapers, with one's gasoline giving out.

That's what happened last night to a squadron of seven army planes. Yet today every man in the squadron was safe, although three of the planes were smashed to bits.

Six men leaped from three planes and floated gently down in parachutes. Four other planes fought their way to safety but scattered landings, three at New York area airports, one at Somerville, N. J.

The planes flying back from Chicago ran into impenetrable fog over the New York area.

There was nothing then to do but say "every man for himself." They scattered, flying by instrument almost entirely.

Near Freehold, N. J., Maj. John G. Colgan, the squadron commander, heard his engine begin to sputter for lack of fuel. He and his mechanic, Private H. W. Martin "bailed" out. Maj. Colgan sprained an ankle when he hit the ground. The plane took some of the roof off a house as it crashed.

Lieut. Arthur L. Logan and his mechanic, Private Whittaker, were perilously near the ocean when they jumped and came down near Long Beach, L. I.

Lieut. John K. Lacey and Corporal Hunter, nursing their gas supply, kept their plane aloft a couple of hours or so. Then they jumped. Lieut. Lacey immediately reported himself safe at Skillman, N. J. For some time Hunter was unreported and believed dead. But he turned up, with a good explanation. He had landed in a tree at Meadsville, N. J., and spent some time cutting branches off the tree to disentangle his parachute without tearing it.

"Army equipment, you know," was the explanation.

DIRIGIBLE IS TO AID IN SEARCH

The Navy Department plans to send the dirigible Macon into New England and probably into Canada to aid in the search for four missing men in two of the James Gordon Bennett race balloons as soon as the weather in those sections clears up, according to Washington dispatches. The ship will probably leave sometime tomorrow.

While Coast Guard vessels combed the sea off New England today for two balloons and their crews, missing since the start of the international air races at Chicago a week ago, weather conditions over Maine prevented a search by army planes from Boston.

Seven planes had been ordered to make the search in Maine but Capt. Glenn Salisbury said today that fog and rain there had forced a postponement of the flight until tomorrow. Only four planes will be available then.

Kiss? That's Just a Bit Too Much

Chicago, Sept. 9 (AP)—It was all right when a robber took Miss Gladys Raymond's purse at the point of a pistol yesterday. And she never objected when he removed a $250 diamond ring from her finger.

But when the same armed gunman asked for a kiss she slapped him down.

He escaped.

Two suits, one for $250,000 and the other for $200,000 have been filed in Suffolk Superior Court by the Boston Five Cents Savings Bank against the trustees of the Methodist Religious Society, of Boston, to recover on two notes secured by mortgages on property at 155-189 Columbus ave., and the church property at Exeter and Newbury sts., Back Bay.

The $250,000 suit is on a demand note for $162,500 made in 1925, and secured by a mortgage on the Columbus ave. property. The smaller suit is on a note for $150,000 payable in three years, made in 1928, on property at Exeter and Newbury sts. Edwin C. Jenney is counsel for the plaintiffs.

The activities were featured by a parade of more than 6500 veterans who had seen active service in the World War. This was followed by an air meet at the Muster field at which four men and four women are to be elected to represent Massachusetts at the National Charity Air Show, at Roosevelt Field, in New York, Oct. 7 and 8.

RECALL WAR DAYS

The veterans talked of the untimely deaths of Corp. Edward P. Clark, of Framingham, and Private Patrick J. Sullivan, of Natick, who were cut down when a bolt of lightning struck stacked rifles to kill these two boys and render 20 of their comrades unconscious.

The firing of an aerial barrage of 16 shots at the old muster field at Framingham Junction at 8:52 this morning commemorated the 16th anniversary of the birth of the 101st Infantry by the fusion of the old "Dandy Fifth" and the "Fighting Ninth" and opened the second day of the three-day 101st Infantry convention program.

Weekend Showers to Disperse Hot Wave

A showery weekend is in prospect but the overcast sky will prevent it from getting too hot. The temperature reached a maximum of 83 yesterday and fell no lower than 68 during the night.

It was soaring again today but would have been considerably hotter with bright sunshine. The humidity—that's something we'd rather not think about.

Crickets Driving Lynn Frantic

If things would only settle down in Cuba the fighting forces of Uncle Sam might be mobilized for Lynn's cricket war, it's getting that discouraging in the North Shore city.

Superintendent of Refuse Hugh A. McManus, commander-in-chief in the battle of crickets at the Austin sq. dump, has exhausted every other effort to still the pests.

The latest move, that which followed the unsuccessful oil and flame of the fire department, was truckload after truckload of gravel that Supt. McManus ordered spread on the dump. The crickets seemed to like it.

No less than 15 experts have conferred with McManus, but the crickets still chirped today.

Court Frees Man Held as Thief

On a claim that he was a visitor to her apartment and not a burglar, Gustave Clough, of China Lake, Me., formerly of Newhall st., Lynn, was free today of a charge of stealing $35 from Mrs. Betty Reid, 35, of Lynn.

Mrs. Reid told Judge Philip A. Kiley she was expecting her husband when Clough walked in with what she thought was a gun or a blackjack in his hand. Clough claimed that he was a guest of Mrs. Reid and that he was wrongfully accused. The court believed him.

'BUY DAY' DRIVE IS BACKED BY CARDINAL

Directs the Parochial School Children Join in Blue Eagle Pledge

Cardinal O'Connell today endorsed the NRA BUY DAY observances to be held next Wednesday, Sept. 13, and directed that 35,000 Boston parochial school children join those of public schools in pledging allegiance to the Blue Eagle.

At the same time arrangements were completed for radio broadcast of the demonstration over Radio Station WAAB and Columbia Broadcasting officials were working on plans for a coast-to-coast bookup.

MAYOR TO GIVE OATH

This spectacle of the youth of the city taking their pledge to support the NRA, to "Buy in September" and to "Buy American" will take place on Boston Common at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of Sept. 13. Mayor James M. Curley will explain the aims of the Blue Eagle drive, the part that the children of a nation play in it and then will lead the massed thousands of youngsters in their Blue Eagle pledge.

Already the public school children had been called to the Common, and Mayor Curley proclaimed a half-holiday in all city departments, but the patriotic act of His Eminence the Cardinal, climaxed the plans for the children's part in this stirring spectacle of patriotism.

This demonstration on Boston Common follows a morning program in all Boston schools, both public and parochial, at which "Blue Eagle Primers," telling the story of the NRA and the BUY drive, will be distributed to the children.

BIG PARADE PLANNED

These "Blue Eagle Primers" were compiled by the Boston Evening American-Boston Sunday Advertiser sponsors of the NRA BUY DAY, and offered as the contribution of these newspapers on this patriotic occasion.

The "Over the Top" parade, comprising civic, military, trade and other organizations starts at Clarendon and Tremont sts. at 3 o'clock and follows the route of the annual school cadet parade.

Floats, marchers and bands will form this mighty cavalcade born almost overnight, which will climax the NRA BUY DAY

O'ROURKE'S PAL IS SOUGHT

Patsy Di Deo, of the South End, reported as the last man seen with John E. O'Rourke, slain truckman, liquor runner and underworld sheik, was sought today for questioning on O'Rourke's death.

The search for Di Deo began after an all-day grilling at police headquarters of Phillip J. DeGeorge, 31, of Lincoln ave., Somerville, and Isaac Burley of Revere.

According to Police Inspector John F. McCarthy and State Detectives Albert Brouillard and Michael Fleming, DeGeorges told them the slain man was with Di Deo Thursday night, at a time officials believe was a few hours before two bullets in the head ended his life.

Burley, they said, denied he was with the group but added that he at various times had dealings with O'Rourke in the purchase of small quantitites of alcohol.

Three Injured in Roxbury Auto Crash

Two Providence women and a Maine girl were nursing injuries today as the result of an auto collision at Longwood and Brookline aves., Roxbury.

The injured, Mrs. Ada O'Donnell, 35, and Mrs. Esther Bouchard, 35, both of Providence and Miss Celia Jabert, 20, of Lisbon, Me., were passengers with Edward Bouchard of Providence. Bouchard and Randolph K. Martin of Wellesley, driver of the other car, escaped injury.

SOMERVILLE GIRL MURDERED, BODY HIDDEN IN BUSHES

LITTLE VICTIM STRANGLED BY SLAYER

command of the hunt for the slayer.

Bishop took State Detectives Sherlock and O'Neil, solvers of many crimes, to Somerville police headquarters to make plans for the search.

Three men suspected in previous attempts to annoy little girls are wanted for questioning.

"This is the most fiendish crime that has come to my attention in 12 years' work in the prosecutor's office," said Bishop.

"We've made a start. If more help is needed I will call on the state to furnish it. Nothing will be left undone to bring the murderer to justice."

VANISHED ON ERRAND

The body of the little girl, who planned happily to return to school Monday, will be released to her parents this evening. Both mother and father are in a state of collapse.

Margaret disappeared on an errand to a shoemaker's shop in Somerville ave., near Union sq., where she went for shoe polish.

Scores searched for her for hours last night. Radio assisted. Her mother sat up all night waiting and praying for her return.

At 8 o'clock this morning she was found on her right side in the bushes, a wound in the back of her head, her features distorted, and marks of the throttling on her neck.

Her shoes were missing. This quickly discounted the possibility of her having been a victim of a hit-and-run driver.

All agencies of the law were called into the search for her slayer within an hour.

ATTACKED, SAYS WATTERS

Dr. William H. Watters, assistant to Medical Examiner George Burgess Magrath of Boston, was called to aid the autopsy and announced:

"The body is covered with black and blue marks. There are also what look like fingernail marks.

"There are scratches on the neck, the back and the forehead, and bruises on the abdomen, thighs, legs and one arm, besides the wound in the back of the head."

There was evidence of an attack, the police said.

A broken pint bottle of the flat type, wrapped in brown paper, lay on the ground near the child's head.

Margaret was one of five children of Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy who only yesterday celebrated their 19th wedding anniversary. Today their joy was gloom.

Shortly after noon yesterday the little girl went happily skipping from her home with a dime to visit the shoemaker's shop of Albert F. Capone of 316 Somerville ave.

The polish was for her own shoes—in anticipation of returning Monday to her studies in the fifth grade of St. Joseph's parochial school, where she was an honor pupil.

Capone said she bought the polish but returned about 1:30 because she had the wrong kind. He gave her the money back in pennies, and she left.

The scene of the finding of the body is an exclusive residential section of Cambridge, a mile or more from her home.

There is a high wooden fence surrounding the grounds of the Divinity School in the rear of the Harvard dormitories in Oxford st. The body lay almost against this fence, about three feet in from the Gorham st. sidewalk, partially concealed by knee high bushes in full foliage.

The little child lay on her back, one leg bent under her, her mouth partly open, her features contorted. On her neck, especially on the right side, appeared the tiny hemorrhages which result from strangulation.

There were no injuries or any other marks upon the body, found in the first examination, which would support a theory she might have been struck by an automobile.

The absence of Margaret's shoes was held of particular significance by the police. They expressed the belief she met death elsewhere.

A white and green checked cotton dress, by which tentative identification was made by the Boston Evening American within a few minutes of the discovery, was partially disarranged, but only to the extent which might have resulted from the body being carried.

SEVERAL SUSPECTS

In the district there are several fine homes and a number of exclusive apartment houses. Residents in these were questioned, but none either last night or early today saw or heard anything suspicious. The particular corner where the body was concealed is poorly lighted.

Near the body were a section of rusted iron pipe and a man's old shoe. They were taken by the investigators but it is doubted they have any connection with the crime.

Neighbors of the McCarthys revealed there had been several cases recently of children being molested or approached with invitations to take auto rides.

Robert McCarthy, a child also living in Marion st. but no relation of the dead girl, was nearly lured into a black sedan by strangers Thursday afternoon. At the last minute he changed his mind and ran home.

In connection with all these occurrences and the slaying as well, police have several suspects tentatively in mind.

It was about 11:30 yesterday when Margaret was sent to Capone's shoe repairing establishment by her mother. When within an hour she had failed to return, Mrs. McCarthy visited the shop and was told by Capone that Margaret had been there and bought the polish.

The police were called into the search and late yesterday inquiries were begun at hospitals on the possibility that the child may have met with an accident. About 50 neighbors of the McCarthys joined in search of backyards near the Marion st. home last night.

All through the night the mother sat up awaiting word from the search and when, shortly after 8 o'clock this morning, the tragic result was made known to her, she collapsed.

Margaret was an attractive, dark-haired, dark-eyed child, and a general favorite in the neighborhood, the "darling" in her own household, and under a physician's care.

IN SIXTH GRADE

She was a pupil at St. Joseph's parochial school, Somerville, and on Monday would have entered the sixth grade there, an event to which she had eagery been looking forward for several weeks. Monday, now, will probably witness her burial.

Melvin Fowler, of 50 Hammond st., found the body while starting for work. He telephoned Capt. Timothy F. Leahy at the North Cambridge station who with Capt. Canney, Inspector Edward J. Glennon, Patrolmen Covell and Gaffney and Sergt. John Cunningham, the latter from Somerville, sped to the scene.

A large crowd gathered at the McCarthy home where Mrs. McCarthy was in a state of collapse and under a physician's care.

IDENTIFIED BY FATHER

Before the body was removed to the undertaker's, the child's father was called to make positive identification. He was overcome at the shock.

"It's—it's my girl," was all he could say.

He then went home and broke the sad news to the mother and the dead child's sisters. All in the family are girls—Mary, 17; Helen, 14; Theresa, 7, and Joan, 3. The youngest looked in wonderment on the scene of grief, but cried for "Peggy."

Rev. John J. Quinlan, curate at St. Joseph's, went to the house in Marion st. to console the parents.

Capone told this story to a Boston Evening American reporter:

"She came in shortly after noon, and asked for a bottle of shoe polish. I didn't have it and gave her paste, telling her to bring it back and get her 10 cents back if her mother didn't want that.

"She came back very quickly. 'This isn't what mama wanted,' she said. I gave her 10 pennies and she went skipping out. I didn't see her again."

OFFICIALS AT DEATH SCENE

SURROUNDINGS AT POINT WHERE MARGARET WAS FOUND

The body was found as indicated by arrow—in clump of bushes—along an eight-foot wooden fence—that surrounds the Harvard Divinity School. This is Gorham st., as it looks near Hammond, in Cambridge, an exclusive residential district.

BODY OF GIRL TAKEN FROM BUSHES

Cambridge police remove the body of little Margaret from the clump of bushes on Gorham st., near Hammond, after the medical examiner had made an examination of the body. Marks on throat indicated that the child had been throttled. The finding followed an all-night search for Margaret—reported missing.

Missing Shoes of Patent Leather

The strangely missing shoes of Margaret McCarthy, slain 10-year-old Somerville girl, were described as follows by police:

The only other shoes she had were at the cobbler's.

"Look, mother, my feet are almost on the ground," she told her mother yesterday morning.

scene which was so soon to be followed by tragedy.

"Peggy was going to St. Joseph's School, Monday, and I wanted her to look nice. I sent her to Capone, the shoemaker on Somerville ave., to get some white liquid for her shoes. She came back in a few minutes with some white paste.

"'You should have taken the liquid, Peggy,' I said. 'That's better. But no matter, the paste will do.' But Peggy was such a good little thing, she insisted on going back to the store to get the liquid. She always wanted to please me.

"Oh, if I could only have known what was to happen! How could I know that she would be killed and tossed in the bushes!"

Mrs. McCarthy had been told that Peggy had been killed by a hit-run driver. Only John McCarthy, the child's father, knows what the police suspect, that the child had been probably lured away, attacked and strangled.

Kind relatives sought to lighten the terrible shock.

"Think of the Lindberghs," said one friend. "They're not sure 'twas their baby who was found dead. At least you know Peggy is dead. Probably she didn't suffer at all. Come, now, Mrs. McCarthy, brace up."

Peggy's sisters, Mary, 18, and Helen, 15, sat close to their mother, trying to comfort her. Two other sisters, Theresa, 7 and Joan 4, with frightened looks, could not understand the tragedy which struck the household such a heavy blow.

SILENTLY WAITS

Alone in a corner, too stunned to speak, John McCarthy, the child's father, sat, his gnarled hands pressed close together. He alone of the family knew the police theory. Eagerly he awaited the sound of the doorbell. Police promised to tell him what the autopsy revealed.

He seemed to be praying. Praying that his little girl had been killed by a hit-and-run driver. He could stand that.

But that other horrible thought—his little girl in clutches of a degenerate—crying for help, while she was being strangled, seemed to be thrusting itself into his mind. But all this, he must not let his wife know. He must keep it to himself—and silently wait.

MARGARET WAS SEEN HERE, YESTERDAY

Into the cobbler's shop, conducted by Albert F. Capone, skipped little Margaret McCarthy, yesterday. She was on her way to buy a bottle of shoe polish. She took paste instead of polish—paid for it. Her mother didn't want paste—so Margaret returned to Capone—got her money back. Margaret never went back home. Her body was found this morning. Cause of her death is being investigated by Somerville and Cambridge police.

ROLE FOR BARBARA STANWYCK

'Gambling Lady' Purchased by Jack Warner as Next Film Vehicle for Star

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Copyright, 1933, Universal Service, Inc.

Los Angeles, Sept. 9—Sorta exciting and different is the story that Jack Warner has just purchased for Barbara Stanwyck. Barbara, who has been stooging for Frank Fay on the New York stage, returns to play the lead in "Gambling Lady," by Doris Malloy.

Jack Warner, who put his John Hancock on a check to Miss Malloy, says that "Gambling Lady" is the feminine version of Rothstein. Miss Stanwyck, in other words, plays a member of a gambling syndicate and starts being original by being the first lady racketeer on the screen.

Mary Carlisle, who at the moment is seen everywhere with Eddie Hellman, plays the juvenile lead. Mary is M-G-M's pet child and every time she leaves the studio that discovered her she is sure to return. Lionel Barrymore, who, in the opinion of most people, is our greatest character actor, plays the husband of Alice Brady.

The most annoyed person in Hollywood yesterday was Joan Blondell. Some one printed that she and George Barnes were blessed-eventing. Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon are two others who are annoyed at a false report that they are blessed-eventing. It seems that Jimmy and friend wife had a son born in England while they were traveling abroad.

Expert Is the Met's Cue Both for Screen and Stage Show

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Right off the bat let me confess that I am partial to Mr. Herb Williams. Ditto, to Mr. Gary Cooper. So between these two I am royally entertained by the Metropolitan's program, which thows the spotlight on the former and lets the screen hero in for some excellent acting through "One Sunday Afternoon."

Back to the Gay '90s swings the theme for the featured movie. Mr. Cooper is a coxcomb swain, who loses his "best gal" to Neil Hamilton, and then comforts himself with a rather devoted lass who works out his marital salvation. Mr. Cooper, being the town's bad boy, has to go to jail; freed, he sets himself up as a dentist. Fay Wray is the siren. Frances Fuller, a newcomer to the screen, is the faithful shadow bride. Incidents of romantic and often of humorous turn, weave in and out, and the photoplay proves delightful comedy drama.

The acting is fine especially of Mr. Cooper, who is better than usual. But the chief merit of this picture lies in the intelligent direction of Stephen Roberts, a gentleman who has rapidly built himself up as a constructor of "atmosphere." There is a surpassing charm in the genuineness and simplicity which his cameras lay as a basis for the story.

On the stage, Mr. Williams, one of the best of all the "one man shows," surrounds himself with excellent stooges, and puts across a hokum entertainment rarely equaled. He has many of his contraptions from the "Vanities," including the trick pianos and the bottomless basket; but he has added other gadgets. In a nutshell his contribution to the program is nutty and screamingly funny.

Other stars in the revue are Lillian Shade, singer; Misses Katz and Zanon, in a dramatic dance; and a generous number of clever dancers.

Mr. Sevitzky leads the orchestra with the skill of a master, with triumphant acclaim resulting. And at the organ, Mr. Martel, swinging back from his excursions among trifles, demonstrates the true value of the instrument by brilliantly portraying some of our very human moods.

Gaiety Theater

Starting tomorrow the Gayety screen will feature Pat O'Brien in "Destination Unknown," with Ralph Bellamy and Betty Compson, and "Private Detective 62," with William Powell, Margaret Lindsay and Arthur Byron. On the stage.

Gala Bill at Orpheum

By SIBYL WARNE

With Lee Tracy doing a grand job in the film "Turn Back the Clock," one of the cinema's finest novelties in theme and treatment, Loew's Orpheum currently backs its screen up with an all-star show on the stage.

Headliners are the Mills Brothers and Don Redman and orchestra, along with a troupe of 40 or more performers. The Mills Brothers, of course, are the highlight. Their act was marked by vast applause from the audience. They offered a generous, distinctively rhythmic program of songs in their well-known manner.

Redman and orchestra for their part made a colorful background for the entire revue. They were excellent, whether offering their unique band rhythms or supplying the music for the various singers and dancers in the large surrounding company. The entire revue is typical of its kind.

"Turn Back the Clock," is a revelation of what might happen to a person who was given an opportunity to re-live his life with the benefit of mature experience. Events of recent years and even months are brought into the unique plot. Mae Clarke, Peggy Shannon, Otto Kruger and George Barbier contribute excellent performances.

'PENTHOUSE' IS STIRRING SCREEN DRAMA

Exciting From Start Clear to Finish

(For the moment the Screen Editor defers to the pen of a famous writer, a former Bostonian, who herewith reviews the feature film at Loew's State.)

By ARTHUR SOMERS ROCHE

I think "Penthouse" is a corking picture. I was excited, thrilled and amused, and considering that I wrote the novel on which the picture is based, I consider that high praise.

I dictated the novel. Then I corrected the typewritten pages. Then I read the story over to see if it needed changes. Then I read the proofs sent me by Cosmopolitan Magazine. Then I looked it over in the magizine.

Yet last night I saw the picture and discovered that I was in a high state of excitement. I wondered how the deuce Durant would extricate Siddal from his terrible predicament; I wondered if Durant would fall in love with Gertie—in short, I acted and felt exactly as I act and feel when I'm looking at a picture of which I know nothing in advance, when I happen to enjoy the picture.

The thing an author always looks for when he watches a picture made from his own story, are the departures from plot and incident and characterization which have been made.

I found no departures in "Penthouse." If the picture "Penthouse" has a bad plot, then my plot for the novel was bad; if the incidents are bad, then my incidents were bad; if the characterization is poor, then my characterization was poor.

Because "Penthouse" the picture follows "Penthouse," the novel with remarkable fidelity, Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett, the screen authors, did a corking piece of work, and Mr. Van Dyke's direction is, I think.

As for the acting, I can only offer praise. Warner Baxter is exactly what Durant ought to be, and Miss Loy is, I think, better than my original Gertie. Nat Pendleton as Gazzotti, is a remarkable bit of characterization, and Charles Butterworth as the butler is excellent. It really is unfair to pick out any individual member of the cast, for I happened to think they all were great.

I've seen Warner Baxter before and Miss Loy, too. If I ever write an ogiginal story for the screen I'd like to write one for these two. They are actors.

And if it matters at all to a company and cast, I herewith offer my congratulations to the producers and the players. If I do my work as well as they do their's, I'll be well satisfied with myself.

Operetta Set for Colonial

"Music in the Air" will relight the Colonial for a period of two weeks, beginning September 18. Listed in the cast are Reinald Werrenrath, Donald Brian, Walter Slezak, Al Shean, Desiree Tabor, Ann Barrie, Harry Mestayer, Nicholas Joy, Ivy Scott, Alelis Obolansky, Dorothy Johnson and Desha.

A. C. Blumenthal, the producer, asserts that he will attempt to restore the stage by presenting the finest the theater has to offer on tour. For the current jaunt his show is carrying every stick of scenery, including the instruments used in the pit, one of which is a trick piano with a zither attachment.

Superb Is the RKO Boston 'Big Show'

By HARRIS MORGAN

Farce, properly presented, always tickles me pink. "Rafter Romance" teased me into laughting heartily at its preposterous situations, and so I am setting it down as one of the merriest of the season's farcical films. It will surprise you by its cleverness, and will fit you for enjoyment of an extremely good stage show at the RKO Keith Boston.

This is the second week of the Greater Show Season reopening the house, and again there is a gala program. Bill Robinson and his "Goin' to Town" all-Negro show are the footlight entertainers! "Rafter Romance" is the screen feature. This latter happened to be starting as we entered the theater; we began laughing in a jiffy, and kept it up to the end.

An attic is shared by a boy and girl—but the hours are set so that neither is home when the other is in. George Sidney is the landlord who arranges that odd schedule; and out of that scheme of living there pours fun a-streaming. Often it is ludicrous, again just amusing, and soon the story has you "in stitches." You can lay this to the acting of Ginger Rogers as the girl, Norman Foster as the boy, Robert Benchley as the office boss, Laura Hope Crews as the jazzy old maid, and Mr. Sidney as the lodging-house owner.

A gay company it is, and at the finish we can say that a merry time was had by all this audience.

The Negroes on stage present a stellar show highlighted by some of the best of singing and dancing. Robinson himself is in his best form, and he is well nigh matchless. Ada Brown is the chief songbird, Pearl Baines is another bright star, the Russell Woodin choir sings marvelously well; and about all the rest of the performers shine.

It's a grand bill, both on stage and screen.

"OPERATOR 13" :-: By Robert W. Chambers

READ THIS FIRST

Gail Loveless, experienced actress at 20, was sent into the Confederate lines as a Union spy. Disguised as a quadroon laundress, she deceived everybody, including Capt. Jack Gailliard, gallant young spy in the Confederate service, who was ashamed to find himself so deeply stirred by her saffron loveliness. But Vespasian Chancellor, gangling, hawklike chief of Confederate spies, presently exposed her and she fled for her life, stealing Gen. J. E. B. Stuart's horses. She stole also the clothing of a little farm boy to make herself appear to be a little Negro stable boy.

Outwitting the pursuing Chancellor and Gailliard, she captured them one at a time and led them toward the Federal lines, where all knew they would be hanged. But on the way they stumbled upon the dreadful spectacle of a Union army hanging a Confederate spy, and Operator 13, sickened, freed her prisoners. Before he rode away, Gailliard kissed her passionately and she kissed him. Then she rode into Emmettsburg, Maryland, at dusk.

Exhausted, she gave Gen. Stuart's horses to a young man who spoke the pass phrases of the Northern secret service, and, at his advice, lay down under a tree to sleep. The man, a Southern spy, brother of the one hanged that day, betrayed Operator 13 to the beautiful but implacable Lady Greensleeves, Confederate spy, who was living in Emmettsburg. At pistol point, Lady Greensleeves captured Operator 13, but in the confusion occasioned when the Confederate cavalry rode into town the girl escaped.

Finding Gen. Stuart's horses hidden in Lady Greensleeve's stable, Operator 13 stole them back and hid them in an orchard. Just before dawn, determined to capture the beautiful Southern spy, she tried every window and door of the house in which the other woman slept, but without success. Then, on a sudden inspiration, she gathered an armful of lilies and set off down the road toward St. Joseph's School, where she had seen the nuns gather in the yard, excited and alarmed, the evening before.

(Republished from Cosmopolitan Magazine and soon to appear on the screen as a Cosmopolitan production made by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and starring Marion Davies.)

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

As she came near she could hear very faintly, the nuns singing in their chapel; and she hurried through the open postern, where an unexpected lantern still glimmered, and made her way along the cloisters toward the refectory, where a candle burned and two novices moved like gray ghosts among the shadows. The room was fragrant with the odor of hot bread.

[illegible] the lilies for us" asked one of them, a little startled, mark o[illegible]gged Negro lad came panting to the open door.

The other novice laughed. "Thank Mrs. Morris and say that no nun is afraid of Jeb Stuart."

Gail Loveless rolled her lovely dark eyes at the plate of hot bread. "Yaas'm, lady-sister. Lawzee me, how dem beaten biscuits du smell!"

"If you want some breakfast," said the other novice, "go into the laundry." She pointed to the door and Operator 13 opened it and entered. No candle burned there, but a gray light came in through the open gallery.

Almost immediately the novice came in with a plate full of beaten biscuit, molasses and bacon; and a cup of fresh milk. "Was Mrs. Morris frightened by the shooting last night?" she inquired.

"Yaas'm, lady," replied the girl, munching the bacon and hot bread which she sopped in the blackstrap and devoured in ecstasy, her eyes rolling heavenward.

"I wonder if you know whether Mrs. Howe has returned?" inquired the novice cautiously.

"Yaas'm" replied Lucille.

"Is she going away again?"

"Dunno, ma'am."

LEFT ALONE

A bell tinkled from somewhere within; the little novice folded her hands a moment, then crossed herself, turned and went into the refectory, her white veil floating like a cobweb in the wind from the closing door.

Instantly Operator 13 ran to the great wicker hampers filled with soiled garments. Here were the habits, wimples, collarettes, coiffes and veils of the order, destined for the laundry or for dry cleaning. And among them was the habit of a Sister of Sainte Chryseis, evidently a visitor at Saint Joseph's. The habit of this order seemed to be cream-white and brown, and hooded over the wimple like the capuchin of a Trappist, or of a missionary Carmelite father.

The girl hesitated, then seized this unfamiliar dress, the wimple and collarette, and white wool stockings.

Rows and rows of coarse, low-cut shoes belonging to the nuns stood along the gallery, awaiting cleaning. She found a pair to fit her, unhooked a rosary from the bunch that dangled from a hook under the laundry clock, and, rolling everything into a hasty bundle, crept out into the gray light of daybreak.

Nobody in the street was yet astir; arrived in the orchard once more, breathless, and fell to putting on the garments over her rags of a Negro boy—the coarse white stockings, clumsy shoes, white wool habit, starched collarette, bonnet, wimple, coiffe; and over all she flung the thin, nut-brown overcloak with its peaked capuchin which left her face in shadow.

Then, under this she buckled her belt around her with the knife in its sheath behind and out of sight, and hung the rosary with its brass crucifix from the soft leather girdle about her right thigh.

GORGEOUS DRAMA

Never had this young actress dreamed of playing so magnificent a role in any drama ever written. Never had she known such alarm as now penetrated her with a terror so utterly delicious that the combination of pleasure and fear seemed almost unendurrable.

She knew that the end already was very near—that the final curtain already was twitching to descend. But what might be the impending finale no longer worried her, and she gave no thought to it in the glory of her overwhelming exaltation. She realized only that hers was the leading role; that this was her drama; this her great moment; and she meant, by God's grace, to make the most of it though Death sat watching her across the footlights.

She had been knocking for nearly 10 minutes at the front door of the Morris house when a sleepy, half-dressed Negro maid opened the door and stood rubbing her drowsy eyes.

"I have a message for Mrs. Howe," whispered Operator 13.

"Lady, ma'am, I dassent wake up Mis' Howe——"

The girl pushed her aside and stepped into the hallway. There was a coat-and-hat closet with a key in the door which stood open just behind the Negro maid. With an abrupt violence Operator 13 pushed the maid into it and turned the key on her. She listened a moment, but the Negress appeared to be dumb with terror, for no African howl came from within the locked closet.

Through the open front door the sickly pallor of daybreak illuminated the carpeted hallway. Operator 13 did not entirely close the door; a little morning light still came through the crack. She walked forward to the front of the stairs, and stood still, listening intently.

She could see nobody on the dusky landing above, but there certainly was a noise of something stirring up there. Then a bedroom door opened; candlelight flickered over wall and ceiling.

Instantly Operator 13 started to ascend the carpeted stairs. As she arrived on the landing, Lady Greensleeves confronted her.

There was a startled silence; then Lady Greensleeves calmly inquired where the strange nun came from.

"Your maid admitted me," said Operator 13. "I come from St. Joseph's."

"No, madam, a visitor. I am Sister Aethra of Ste. Chryseis."

Lady Greensleeves, evidently, knew that there was a visiting nun from another order at St. Joseph's, for she inclined her beautiful head and seemed to await further enlightenment concerning this strange daybreak intrusion.

She was in her nightdress and barefoot; the wheat-gold hair framing her lovely face fell almost to her waist.

"I bring you a message by grapevine," said Operator 13 in a low voice.

"From Mr. Gaston."

"Give it, then."

"Are you truly Mrs. Rosalie Howe, Secret Service agent for Gen. Beauregard?"

"This, then, is the grapevine message, madam: The blockade runner, Miranda, lies off False Cape. You are to signal her by waving a handkerchief in each hand."

"I understand," said Lady Greensleeves quietly. "Is that all?"

"That is the grapevine telegram sent to you from Mr. Gaston in Richmond. There is another message from Vespasian Chancellor."

"Give it," said Lady Greensleeves.

"On October 10," whispered Operator 13, "Col. Williams and Lieut. Dunlap, Secret Service agents of the Confederate Government, were taken inside the Yankee lines, tried by courtmartial and hanged as spies. You are to inform Miriam C., Rachel Lyons and Mrs. Phillips."

BAD NEWS

Lady Greensleeves passed her white hand across her cloudy golden hair. "This will kill Rachel," she said, staring at the supposed nun. For a moment she stood mute, twisting agonized fingers. The she went to one of the bedroom doors, knocked, opened it, and said to the querulous inquiry of Mrs. Morris: "They've caught Dunlap and Williams and hanged them. You'll have to notify Rachel Lyons by grapevine. I have to dress and leave immediately."

"Oh, Rosalie, how awful!"

But Lady Greensleeves silenced her with a warning not to awaken the sleeping child.

"Our cavalry have gone on to New Market," she whispered. "This town is full of Yankee spies and sympathizers, and Pleasanton's horsemen will be here on Jeb Stuart's heels before sunrise. I leave my baby in your charge."

"Where are you going, Rosalie?" whimpered Mrs. Morris.

"To False Cape. The Miranda is waiting. A nun brought this news. Give her some breakfast while I dress."

She closed the door, nodded to Operator 13, pointed to a chair in the corridor, and went into her bedroom.

The moment she disappeared Operator 13 rose and swiftly locked the door of the bedroom where Mrs. Morris was now moving distractedly about.

There was one more bedroom. Operator 13 took the burning candle, opened the door and peeped in. A lovely little girl of 10 lay sound asleep in bed.

Now, with infinite care, Operator 13 removed the doorkey, which was inside, and locked this door, also, from the outside. Only the door of Lady Greensleeves' bedroom remained unlocked now.

SURPRISED

"Mrs. Howe?" she called cautiously.

As Lady Greensleeves, half dressed, came out in the corridor, Operator 13 snatched the key from the inside keyhole and had slammed and locked the door and flung the key down the dark stair well before the other understood what was happening.

She stared, astounded, at the nun, who stood with her long knife in her hand barring her way. Then her beautiful, incredulous gaze changed, and a tempest of fury swept her features.

"You are a prisoner to the United States!" whispered Operator 13 dramatically. "I am an agent of the Federal Secret Service and I am here to arrest you. Come with me quietly, Mrs. Howe."

Lady Greensleeves was like some exquisite angelic shape cast out of Paradise and cringing to the curse. "On what charge am I arrested?"

"You are a Confederate spy in Maryland."

"No warrant is necessary."

"Do you understand that I shall hang if you arrest me?"

"No. You'll remain in Fort McHenry. Come, Mrs. Howe. Walk down those stairs ahead of me!"

A silence unstirring. Then:

"May I speak to my little daughter?"

"I dare not risk it. If you trick me, I hang . . . No; turn and start downstairs!"

"At least let me look at her."

SURPRISE ATTACK

In a flash Lady Greensleeves sprang on her and caught her right wrist; the knife fell clattering downstairs; but the girl, as slim as a whip and as supple and springy, clung to her prisoner, and they swayed together on the stair landing, tight-locked, wrestling, throttling, striving to hurl each other headlong down the dusky staircase.

"I know you," cried Lady Greensleeve. "You are Operator 13! And now, you young murderess, I'll see to it that you are destroyed!"

The flying mass of her flashing golden hair was blinding the younger girl, who redoubled her blows at random. A bright spot of blood welled up on Lady Greensleeves' mouth. She bared her teeth and ripped the nun's habit from the girl.

Twisting and doubling like fighting serpents murderously encoiled, they struck and dodged and swayed and slithered to the edge of the stairs, fell a step or two downward and recoiled, clutching at each other, then slipped again and tumbled halfway down the stairs.

By Betty Alden

THIRTY YEARS AGO IT WASN'T GOOD FORM for a hostess to enjoy one of her own parties; to be correct she had to cultivate that worried look . . . today she takes her duties lightly and enters into the fun as one of the guests . . .

Such a delightful hostess was Mrs. William H. Coburn when she entertained a gathering of music lovers at her beautiful home on Norton's Point, Manchester, yesterday afternoon . . .

MRS. ROBERT STONE

The occasion was a musicale of chamber music and an exhibition of art to swell the coffers of the Deaconess Hospital . . . with tea seved as a pleasant after-thought . . .

We motored down before noon to have a buffet lunch with a group of friends on the wide verandah which overlooks Manchester harbor . . . Mrs. Coburn greeted us in a sheer ivory and pastel-flowered chiffon, Kate Greenaway in design, which suits her personality. An easy, gracious manner is enhanced by a fine mind . . . we enjoyed her comments on music (she sings beautifully) and art.

The house was interesting, as all North Shore estates are, because of the period in which they were built and the reformations which have taken place as each new owner acquires them . . . the Coburns have "done over" a low, rambling type house into a cool, summery and florally lovely interior . . .

The music room remains mahogany pannelled and beamed . . . bright bouquets of autumn garden flowers in Dresden vases, zinnias, yellow daisies, bachelor buttons and cosmos, made effective still-life pictures against the rich brown wood tones . . . Is there anything nicer than listening to music surrounded by beautiful pictures and objects of art . . . ?

Portraits of a Post Age and Influence

WE PROBABLY HAVE THE HARDEST, STONIEST, nastiest disposition in the world against some kinds of chamber music . . . "A Lullaby to an Elephant," the "Doll's Serenade," "Shepherd's Pipe" and the "Golliwog's Cakewalk," leave us at the vanishing point, but even our adamantine heart melts at Braham's Rhapsody in E-Flat and Chopin's Minuet . . . Miss Ruth Culbertson and her fellow musicians were delightful in the latter . . . in fact, they may have been equally delightful in the former, but Gnome dances, Dances of the Flea and the Bumble-Bee, and Percy Grainger's Hey Nonney, Nonneyings do horrible things to us . . .

During the playing of which, we gazed with pleasure upon a picture of a girl in green, painted by Mme. Emma Fordyce McRae, a serene intellectual study which we would like to live with . . . Mrs. McRae caught the mood of her sitter and exemplified it by a shadow of Chinese print in the background, remote, aloof but alive and inscrutable. In fact, almost all of the artist's portraits are reminiscent of a past age and influence . . .

Her flower studies are equally vivid and are enhanced by their background . . . Ascension Lilies against a Russian tapestry were so cleverly arranged that the canvas was not crowded . . . one simply felt the artist's mood of reverence and dignity.

Dinner Party Precedes Dance

VERY FRIENDLY AND INFORMAL WAS THE gathering of society folk who dropped in for the concert . . . Mrs. Walter G. Shields, Jr., a beautiful brunette lady who is the mother of one of our fairest sub-debutantes, Virginia Shields, arrived early, her summery dark-flowered printed chiffon very becoming. Mr. and Mrs. Shields are giving a dinner party before the dance at the Essex County Club this evening and among their guests are Mr. and Mrs. William H. Coburn and Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm B. French . . .

Mrs. French attended the affair in a bittersweet Lastex sport dress with smart black velvet beret . . .

With her attractive daughter, Virginia, Mrs. Robert Stone was a guest and her fresh blue flowered crepe was cool and pretty . . .

Mrs. James Lefevre (Barbara Endicott) arrived in a lovely pale blue afternoon suit lavishly trimmed with gray fox . . . the Lefevres have recently acquired the magnificent estate of the late George White on Smith's Point and will occupy it next season. They are leaving this week for their estate in Norwood where they spend the winters when not traveling hither and yon . . .

Miss Mabel T. Eager, president of the Friends of the Deaconess was present . . . we glimpsed Mrs. Richard Recchia, wife of the well known sculptor in smart autumn brown . . . Constance Learned, a Junior League stand-by, took in the tickets at the door . . . Priscilla and Virginia Phelan were very stunning in their late summer costumes . . .

Mrs. Leavitt Parsons in Print Silk

CHATTING ABOUT THE TEA TABLE on the attractive porch was Mrs. Leavitt Parsons in a snouzy yellow and black print silk, and we glimpsed Mrs. Harold Wise (Edwina Warren) admiring a replica of Minot's Light in the guise of a cocktail shaker which was being displayed by the host, Mr. Coburn . . . it was presented to him for his yacht, Senora, by Ben Ames Williams, the well known author. Taking a last look at the gray-green waters of the bay, over which was skimming a flock of baby sea-gulls in the sunset, we packed ourselves behind the wheel and motored back to town . . . a happy day to remember!

A "depression invitation," as the deb world calls them, has been received . . . Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Lowell Blake of Beverly Farms are giving a tea on Saturday, September 30, to meet Miss Caroline Hunnewell (we hear she wishes to be called Carrol . . . less confusing perhaps and more euphonious than the Wellesley Caroline), Amy Lang, Gwendolyn Livermore and Susan Means, all debutantes of this season.

Notes of the Fashionables

By Dorothy Whipple Fry

IT IS ALWAYS OF INTEREST to realize how much the homes of the ladies of fashion reflect their own personalities and form a pleasing background for their intricate and interesting personalities. For example Mrs. Walter Bucklin is a most unique and interesting woman, while her distinguished husband helps guide the destinies of the banking world.

Mrs. Bucklin creates about herself and her family a most tasteful and artistically planned summer and winter home. Her summer home is in the mountains of New Hampshire, near picturesque Lake Sunapee. It is an old red brick farm house remodeled in rare taste, the living room, low rough hewn rafters of natural wood, a cobbler's bench serves as a fire stool and about the open fireplace hang interesting antiques, old warming pans, strange wrought iron fire tongs and pewter plates adorn the walls.

Mrs. Bucklin, who is a very unique type with red gold hair brushed severely back from her distinguished face, usually wears smart and well tailored sport clothes and tailored type.

Another lady of fashion who has a charming home newly created, we might add, by her talented brother-in-law, Mr. William Aldrich, is Mrs. N. Stewart Cambell of Lee st., Brookline. Her's is a masterpiece of the French style of architecture. The walls are brick, painted white, and tall dark cypress trees grow about it in striking contrast to the background. The interior of her home is a charming compliment to her dainty self. A soft aquamarine shade predominates.

White-Smith Ceremony in Trinity

WHITE LILIES AND CANDLES brighten the chancel of Trinity Church in Copley sq. for the marriage this afternoon at 4 o'clock of Miss Margaret Randall Smith to Mr. John Sturtevant White, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman White, of Sugar Brook Farm, Central Village, Connecticut.

The bride, who is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George Gilbert Smith of 38 Union Park, Boston, is being given in marriage by her father and Dr. William Gardner reads the marriage service.

Sister as Maid

The bride is wearing her grandmother's wedding dress of deep ivory satin with a flowing veil of ivory tulle fastened to her hair with pearl flowers. Her sister, Miss Huldah Smith, is serving as her only attendant in a frock of peach satin with a peach colored hat trimmed with turquoise flowers. Her bouquet is of talisman roses.

Mr. Stephen Gardiner Sleeper, Jr., of Chestnut Hill, is best man and the ushers are Norman White, Jr., New Canaan, Ct.; Henry S. Woodridge, Brookline; A. Eliot Ritchie, Jr., of Brookline, and M. Frank Neer, Jr., of Delaplane, Va.

After the wedding ceremony the bridal couple receive their friends at a reception at the home of the bride's parents.

Studied Abroad

The bride is a Winsor School graduate and also studied in Paris. She made her debut in the 1929-30 season at a dance at the Country Club. Mr. White prepared at Exeter for Harward, where he was a member of the class of 1935. He and his bride are both aviation enthusiasts and both possess private pilot's licenses.

Mrs. R. B. Harkness, Jr.

Members of the general committee include a representative list of Cambridge residents who are interested in the success of this charity and who are prominently known. Among them are C. Tracy Ryan, manager of the Continental Hotel, as chairman, William L. Galvin, J. Edward Nally, Miss Grayce Darling, Miss Ethel Porter, Atty. George McKleelgett, Dr. W. A. Dudley, Councillor Horace Skilton, Dr. P. F. Kelleher, James N. White, Dr. Adeline Dunham, Harold G. Jackson, Mrs. Ingrid O. Noyd, Miss Nina Littlefield, Ruel W. Miss Harriet Fuller, Mrs. Walter Wyeth, Mrs. Mark Hopkins and Mrs. Robert Bruce Harkness, Jr., will be among the models.

Miss Edith Bass Weds Today in East Walpole

A CHOIR of boys' voices sing while the guests are gathering in the little church in East Walpole at 4 this afternoon to witness the marriage of Miss Edith Deirdre Bass, daughter of ex-Governor and Mrs. Robert P. Bass of Peterborough, N. H., to Mr. Frank Adair Bonsal, son of the late Frank A. Bonsal and Mrs. Charles L. A. Heiser of Glyndon, Maryland.

The Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving of Trinity Church in Boston, assisted the Rev. Roy Packard in reading the marriage service and Mr. Bass gave his daughter in marriage.

White Satin

Miss Jeanne Bass attended her sister as maid of honor, and Miss Diana Bird, the bride's little cousin, is flower girl. Two little pages, Robert and Gerry Bass complete her attendants.

White satin with a filmy tulle veil fashions the bridal costume with which she is carrying white sweet peas and gardenias. The maid of honor is frocked in beige with a matching hat, and the little flower girl makes a charming picture in a white and silver dress.

Mr. Lurman Stewart, Mr. Bonsal's uncle, is best man with a corps of ten ushers, whose names are well known in the field of sports and society. They are Messrs. James L. Van Allen, Thomas W. To Live in South

Miss Bass, a debutante of last season, a member of the Junior League, and Vincent Club, was presented with her cousin, Mary Reynolds Bird, at a tea at Endean, the family homestead in East Walpole in which her grandmother, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, makes her home.

After their wedding journey, the bridal couple will be at home at Mantua Farms in Glyndon, Maryland.

Danish Prince Is Wed to Cousin

Fredenborg, Denmark, Sept. 9— Prince Knud, 33, younger son of King Christian, and Princess Caroline Mathilde, his cousin, were married at the royal chapel as a strong guard was posted to ward off any demonstrations.

The precautions were taken after decorations on the streets had been torn down during the night, allegedly by Communists. Troops and detectives were detailed throughout the village as nobility arrived to witness the wedding ceremony.

The princess, 21 years old, is the second daughter of Prince Harald, the king's brother.

The engagement of the couple at first was said to have been opposed by Caroline Mathilde's mother, Princess Helena, because of their near relationship. Capital residents, however, were pleased.

GUARD THE LOVELINESS OF YOUR EYES WITH THE CARE YOU GIVE YOUR PEARLS

Gentle Creams and Soothing Lotions Keep the Eyes Clear and Bright

By Therese Deschamps

TRY TO FORGET that little rhyme about the light that lies in women's eyes and lies and lies—if you can.

There really can't be any truth in it. Just try it yourself. If you want to look as if you are terribly in earnest when you sigh and say, "I am so, SO sorry I can't go with you tonight," when you are dodging a date, say it over the telephone.

Your eyes are liable to give you away. Thoughts are very often reflected in those little pools of sunlight and sorrow (how is that for a five dollar phrase) before you can collect all your thoughts and rearrange them for the public.

Eyes Important

We would say then that the eyes were vastly more important to the general plan of "how attractive can I be" than almost any other single feature with the possible exception of the complexion.

The tissues around the eyes are the most delicate of any on the face. That is another reason we have to give them special care. And with this care we can smile to our heart's content and still have freedom from tiny wrinkles that are bound to collect with the years unless we gently pat the kind of creams that are specially prepared to keep this skin soft and youthful.

Another Habit

Eyewashes are another habit one should get—but the kind of eyewash should be the most careful bit of shopping you ever did. There are several excellent ones on the market and most of these have been perfected by eye specialists.

Remember, the time and attention you give to improving your general appearance is like so much money in the bank. Once you have a fair start, it is lots easier to carry on.

If we can assist you with suggestions about the best preparations to use on your eyes, we would be glad to do so. Please send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Therese Deschamps, Boston Evening American.

Beauty Questions and Answers

Dry Treatment

Question: Will you kindly give me a method by which I can keep my hair in good condition without shampooing too often? I am a blonde with oily hair that will not hold a wave. My salary is so small I am unable to buy anything very expensive.—A. C., Winthrop.

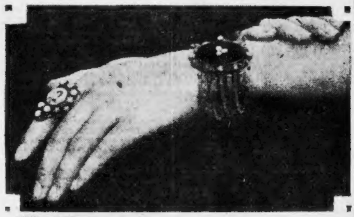
Answer: All you blondes with small pocketbooks who just must hold your gentlemen's preference, take notice. Stop in at the grocery store, purchase some corn meal, go home and sprinkle the corn meal through your hair, brush out thoroughly, and presto! your hair is ready for the evening of dancing, theater, or what have you.

Red Nose

Question: When I go swimming in very cold water, or when I go out in the cold weather, my nose gets so red. It is most embarrassing because it is always the topic of conversation. Can you help correct this? Miss E. L., Roslindale.

Answer: You have my sympathy, Miss E. L., it is embarrassing. First we think you should try a simple treatment, and if the condition does not improve see a doctor. Poor circulation may be the reason. Upon arising in the morning, do some exercises to aid the bodily circulation. At night catch the nose with the thumb and forefinger and massage it, without, of course, stretching it out of shape. In mild cases, bathing the nose with a five per cent solution of alum is very often helpful.

Brilliant Court Jewelry for Every Day Princess



THE GLOWING or subdued richness of the fall and winter fabrics demands a suitable richness in jewelry, both for the sake of setting off the clothes themselves and emphasizing the new, luxurious personality of you.

"I have it!" you gurgle, "Jewelry like the stuff in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. Gorgeous old gold settings, semiprecious stones, scads of them, in quaint, rough shapes. Now, if I could smuggle in a brick and crash into a case when the guard has his back turned—"

But you don't have to do anything as dangerous as that to find jewelry that actually is copied from ancient creations worn long ago in the courts of France, England, Spain and Russia.

Hand-beaten antique gold over a base of sterling silver gilt and encrusted with fiery moonstones, glowing opals, deep purple amethysts, culture pearls, blood red garnets, and yellow topaz—all these precious and lovely things, which men fought and died for hundreds of years ago, have been made into copies of museum pieces, or in some cases inspired by pieces worn in royal drawing rooms.

From the Ural mountains came the turquoises set in onyx of the ring and bracelet shown. Etruscan gold work, fine strands whorled, others braided, combined in the effect of jewelry popular in the early 1800 English court will make every beholder want to seize your wrist and examine its adornments with much envy and admiration. A genuine antique miniature is set in the ring.

The jewelry is hand made, each piece different from the other, spelling individuality-plus, and we can tell you where it may be obtained, at a price surprisingly within average reach for such really wondrous things, if you will be send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Fashion Editor.

Fashions Kind to 'Little Women'

HAVE WE, in our animated response to such fashion vagaries as great shoulder width, exaggerated points, wide-brimmed hats, heavy capes of foxes, plumes on hats and such things, overlooked the problems of "Little Women"?

By Little Women we mean not the quaint characters who may have stepped out of Louisa May Alcott's famed book by the same name, but the majority of women who live today. By actual count, it is said that seven out of ten women are five-feet-four or less, which means probably that you and you and you and most of your friends are in the class spoken of above!

Dress manufacturers haven't forgotten them. There are many who specialize in solving the clothes problems of these women. They consider a dress from an architectural viewpoint, in relation to the figure that will wear it. It is their objective to make small women look taller, and as slim as possible!

Armholes sometimes have to be cut wider. The length from shoulder to waist has to be shortened; the hips often cut a full size larger than the shoulders. Sleeves are shorter from shoulder to elbow and elbow to wrist, and there are often many other dressmaking adjustments necessary to proper fit.

Besides all this, attention is paid to special designing. None of the exaggeration that the tall, thin woman can carry with such tremendous distinction, or the elaboration that emphasizes the figure in the wrong place, can be adapted. Colors must be carefully chosen.

Extreme fashions often need modifications to be wearable. For instance, capes are swinging in stronger than ever this year. Many are extreme in cut, but the capelet sleeves in the afternoon frock sketched are not too full. The surplus closing to one side is slenderizing. Details like this make a modish dress that can be worn becomingly by small women.

The dinner dress shouldn't be too difficult to find, either. Insist on simplicity, long lines and monotone of color, and you'll be safe.

The "bubble-bracelet" of pearls and the ring that matches are a suggestion to wear with either of the costumes. On the dinner dress a rope of pearls, in the newer long 18-inch length, would be an excellent alternative.

The Marry-Go-Round; 'Lowdown'

By HELEN ROWLAND

LOVE AND HAPPINESS, like a four-leaf clover, are always found by accident—never when you are looking for them.

* * *

The honeymoon is not over until she stops saying, "I understand you, darling," and begins saying, "I see through you, old dear."

Helen Rowland

"Class" is what enables a woman to wear a ten-cent store pearl necklace with such an air of distinction that even a gangsters is tempted to hold her up and snatch it from her.

The late depression is rapidly passing; but these are still terrible times for the people who are looking for Easy Street and have lost the way.

After a few years a man loves the sort of woman who is continually telling him what's good for him, almost as fervently as he loves spinach, carrots and his morning exercises.

A girl may sometimes feel conscience-stricken at tempting a defenceless man to kiss her—but not until after the last kiss.

Intuition is neither a strictly feminine nor a strictly masculine gift. But a woman's intuition gets so much more practice than a man's does, because no man ever TELLS her anything until he knows she's guessed it.

* * *

After a few years of the tormenting hazards of free-lancing love, even the most independent girl will turn gratefully to the surety of marriage, and sign on the dotted line with a sigh of relief.

Chickens will always continue to cross the road; and men probably will always continue to jay-walk on the primrose path, in the careless assurance that they can dodge fate or escape being run down by a woman at the last moment.

Today's Hand Knits Deserve to Be Most Precious Belongings in Anyone's Wardrobe

By Annice Brink

REMEMBER the miles of knitted horrors produced during the War? Musty colored, shapeless things. No wonder the gentle art of knitting languished until Mrs. Roosevelt did some unpaid promotion on it.

Hand knits always have been priceless possessions. Those who could, connoisseurs in clothes, have always owned several nice knit things. But the general run of us, every now and then, produced a bulgy sweater with too much open work and a waistline that could be lapped over twice. And that was that.

But the perfectly luscious things done in yarns illustrated today are worth every minute of time put into them. Just last week a blonde debbie's mother talked to us, knitting all the while.

For College

She held her work up and said: "I'm going to have this done for Eileen to take with her to Vassar." And what a treasure it was, a deep liqueur brown one-piece frock, with a v-shaped insert of two colors, a glowing coral and a deeper geranium, on the waist.

The sweater on the upper left is made with perfectly huge needles. Isn't the result divinely ropy? Janie, who hasn't quite gotten over her tomboyish tastes, would dote on it. Citron yellow for the sweater, with an oxford grey suit would help her get better grades in her most despised subject.

Daisy Sweater

The daisy knit sweater on the right is for a fluffy young chick, 12 and up. The sweater itself is white, the neck and waistline are black. Two shades of green, brown, or blue would be just as good looking.

Still another sweater, in the lower left corner, is as unlike the others, except for the daisy knit, as one frock differs from another. Perhaps that's why we have fallen in love with today's knitted things.

Girl, at Last, Finds a Boy She Likes

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am 18 and live in a small town. There is a boy who works in a store near my home, whom I have known for several years, but didn't like him until lately. He speaks to me when I go into the store (I go every day) and seems very nice. Sometimes he chats, and other times he only says "Hello." I've never gone with boys because I never liked any of them well enough to go out with them. Now I want nothing more than to have a date with this boy. How can I make him ask me, or can I?

MILLIE.

Dear Millie: As you've known this boy for several years, why not invite him to your home. Or, if you don't want it to look too pointed invite two or three young people in for Sunday night supper, or to play cards, or to have a little dance. Or you could suggest a Sunday outing. Much is to be said for the old-fashioned picnic basket lunch, where everyone helps.

Embarrassing Moments

The American will pay $1 for each embarrassing moment sent in and printed. Address Embarrassing Moment, Boston Evening American, Boston.

The most embarrassing moment I had was one day in a show in Boston I had a bad headache and I went out to get an aspirin and water. When I came back I sat down and put my head on my husband's shoulder, but when I looked up it was not my husband. I had the right row, but my husband had moved in the next row.

1 cup boiled rice
Pepper to suit taste.

Beat the eggs and add the other ingredients. Mix well and turn into buttered loaf tin. Bake in a moderate oven until the mixture is firm. Remove loaf to a hot platter. Garnish with bacon curls and serve. This is good for supper or lunch.

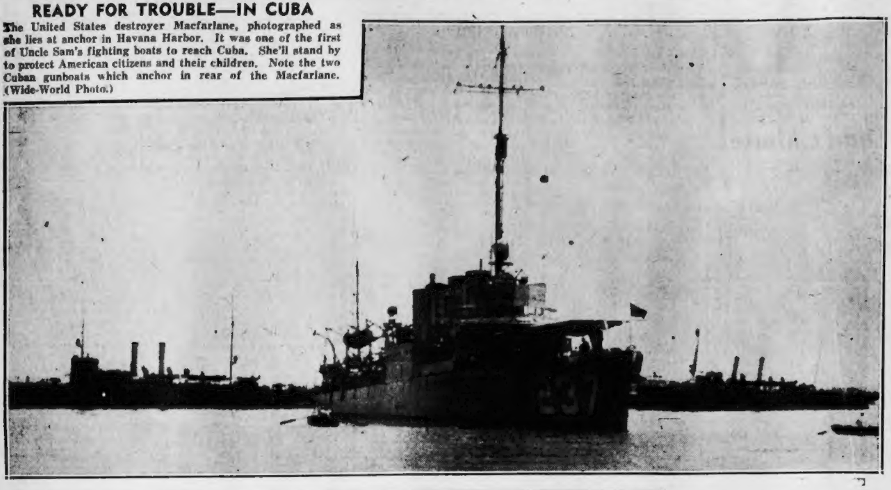
SHIPS---MARINES---SAILORS TO PROTECT AMERICANS IN CUBA



READY FOR TROUBLE—IN CUBA

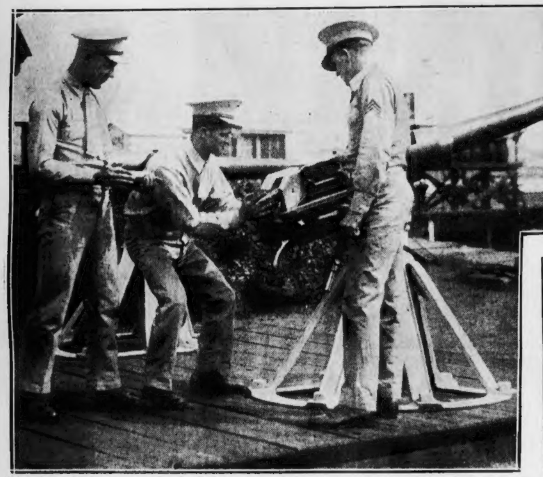
"SHOULDER ARMS"–MAYBE FOR CUBA

The feeling of uneasiness because of Cuban revolt situation has caused Uncle Sam's marines in all ports, to prepare themselves to protect Americans and American business interests. Private Cecil S. Bassett is just one of the many marines at the Boston Navy Yard, who are drilling and preparing for anything that might come their way.



MARINES TURN TO NEW TYPE OF GUNS AT HUB NAVY YARD

Preparing younger marines for any emergency is well in order throughout the land, despite fact that policing Cuba is believed to be about all that will happen in present situation. Nathan Gross, Cecil S. Bassett and Jess C. Gregg, are getting first hand training on new six-pound field gun at the Boston Navy Yard. The drilling started yesterday, but plan is to have men thoroughly accustomed to the guns.

UP FROM RANKS—HE'S CHIEF NOW

From the job of sergeant to the rank of army chief is a big step. But it was easy for Sergeant Fulgencio Batista, shown reading a speech from the balcony of the palace at Havana. He's the new army chief under present government in Cuba. It was his party which overthrew De Cespedes government.

PHILADELPHIA GOBS OFF FOR DANGER ZONE

With supplies and clothing necessary to keep going, sailors of the Philadelphia Navy Yard get ready to leave for Brooklyn Navy Yard, where they will board U. S. destroyers and proceed to Cuba. They help bring crews of Uncle Sam's gunboats up to war time strength, just in case anything should come out of the present Cuban fracas. There was no shore leave for these sailors. (Wide-World Photo.)

EVEN CUBAN MARINES ARE READY TO PUT DOWN RED DEMONSTRATIONS

A group of Cuban marines, with machine guns mounted, photographed at Cabanas Fortress, Havana, where they prepared to combat any further violent demonstration on the part of the Cuban communists against "Yankee imperialism." The man in the center is Corporal Angel Gonzalez, in charge of the Cuban marine detachment. American sailors are ready to land at Santiago and other Cuban points in event of a call for aid from Americans residing in the danger area of the island. Americans are all ready to leave in event of trouble.

By AUSTEN LAKE

Well folks, the colonel's foot slipped.

Not the foot of our Col. Egan, the waggish philosopher of the Red Sox whose soles are equipped with suction plates so that he can walk on ceilings like a house fly. But that of Col. William Fortesque Brodie, the Rockingham horse picker who operates from a temporary Bromfield st. office and for a few dollars cash advance, will furnish a daily two-horse parley that will make you [illegible], maybe.

Here's an excerpt from the colonel's ad in the New York Morning Telegraph, which is the smart horseman's Bible:

> "Notice—Boston readers. Before going to the race track step up to the office and receive today's limit win Parley. Out of town clients wire $2 for today's service, or $5 for six days."

So, just for the prank of the thing, I laid my money on the [illegible] Thursday morning and received tidings that Ayston, a sleek three-year-old by Whistle out of Breath or some such folderol, would tip toe home in the third race. But the other horse in the parlay had been scratched.

As it happened Ayston blew a fuse in the stretch and finished second, which did me no good because my money was on the nag's muzzle. But what does the colonel do in his advertisement of the next day but make a boldface profession that his parlay of Thursday, Bataille and Luculent, had been a double bullseye, just casual samples of the colonel's skill as a picker, and how would you and you and you like to get aboard such a sure-fire means of grabbing a satchel full of easy dough?

So, this morning I called at the colonel's Bromfield st. office and asked to see the venerable old gentleman with the white goatee, the flowered waistcoat and the wide-brimmed black hat. But the colonel, as usual, was somewhere at the racetrack sipping mint juleps with the owners, trainers and jockeys, like his advertisement says, and learning how the horses spent the night. But there are two burly flashes in charge of his office, which is furnished with a pair of lumber desks and a couple of hardwood chairs.

"What can we do to you?" asks the No. 1 flash, a gent who consents to the name of Albert Feldstein and has no permanent address.

The Colonel's Aides Make Three Explanations

So I mention how I purchased the colonel's Thursday advice on Ayston only to find the next morning that Bataille and Luculent had been the genuine pick, as per the Telegraph ad which I offer as evidence, and I think perhaps that the colonel may want to rectify his error and pay me a little less than $100 which would have been my winnings.

Now I am not quite clear as to the answer I get to this, because there are several different answers which do not make a joint. One is that the colonel had to screen the jockeys who were implicated in the two races. The second is that Bataille and Luculent were for the New York clientele only. And the third is that Ayston was a sort of bogus tip for the welchers who had not paid their touting bets of the day previous to the colonel.

Now I must explain about these touting bets!

Suppose you subscribe your $2 for the day's pick or your $5 for the week's service. Then while you are fumbling around, you are told, "Now we got an extra special horse that we are reserving for a selected dozen Boston business men. We got 11 of the dozen now and you can fill the quota. Would you spend fifty bucks on a thing that we can guarantee." And you got a knowing wink, which implies that the race which the Extra Special horse is in, is already wrapped in cellophane and neatly tied with a candy box ribbon, for delivery that afternoon.

If you say, "No," you are told, "Well, you look like a reliable fellow. How about 25?"

Finally, after a couple of more "nos" you get the Extra Special horse for nothing, provided you will lay a couple of dollars on the animal's snout for the colonel's office ("Just to pay the overhead"). Maybe you go for that. But if you do and by some act of Providence the horse gallops in, you had better pay the colonel's cut or you will spend the rest of your life getting postcards and letters from the old gentleman from tracks all over the country, reminding you of the ultimate fate of all welchers and how would you like to be posted as such among your best friends?

Well, by the time I leave the colonel's office, I am in a fluster, and when one of the flashes asks, "And who, anyway, are you?" I tell him that I live by writing literature for the sport pages. Which seems to make a sudden impression on him, and he says, "O, can't we do something about this." But I shake my head sadly, and say, "No, I guess not."

Fast Work in Printing Office; Episode on the Train

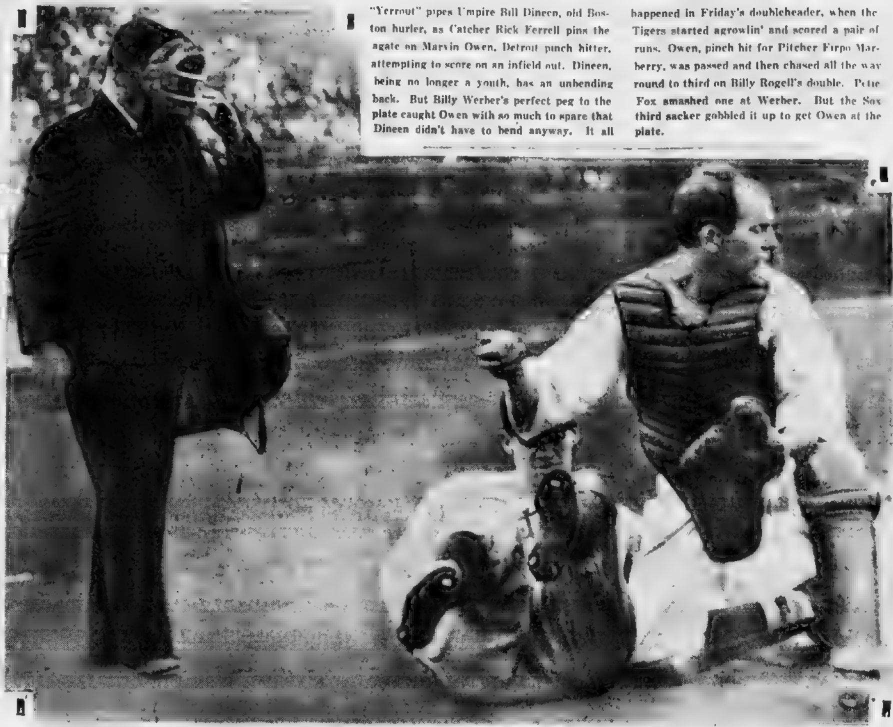
I should know better than to fiddle with the fates, perhaps, although the more a fellow gets around the easier he is to get around. And it is common knowledge, for example, that there is a portable, or gypsy, printing press in Lawrence which does a chain lightning job of mimeographing dope sheets for a professional custom after the fifth race in the afternoon. The five winners are already in, you see, so the pressmen go to work and print the five while guessing at the other two winners that are still to come, and by the time the crowd comes out of the park, the expert pickers are distributing the pages as left over copies of their morning selections. Just as propaganda for the next day's trade.

And sometimes on the trains coming home, a queer little gnome or three will stand up in the aisle and shout, "Just a minute fans. I'm Hot Horse Harry, known as the dean of clockers. Just leave me show you, f'rinstance, what I done today. Here I give you Clubfoot Kate in the first, and she comes in 12 to 1. Were you on that? Not unless you bought my form, because until last month Clubfoot Kate was drawin' a milk wagon in Dorchester. I even clock milk wagons."

And he will go down the entire list of the day, leering scornfully along the aisle as he tolls off the day's winners, eight out of eight which would have rolled a $2 initial bet into enough to buy out Rockingham, real estate and furnishings. "I made a year's pay today," he signs off. And the next day he is out bright and early hustling his charts to all comers and, maybe, doing a land office business, the proceeds of which he will spend on bad bets at the track.

Well, I may go back to Bromfield st. again, on the chance of finding the colonel idling over a mint julep and dreaming of the Blue Grass befo' de wa'. And if so I am going to hand him a bill of slightly less than $100 for wilfully misleading me on Ayston in that third race Thursday.

One Run That Didn't Matter -:- -:- Owen Caught at Plate



"Yerrout" pipes Umpire Bill Dineen, old Boston hurler, as Catcher Rick Ferrell pins the agate on Marvin Owen, Detroit pinch hitter, attempting to score on an infield out. Dineen, being no longer a youth, has an unbending back. But Billy Werber's perfect peg to the plate caught Owen with so much to spare that Dineen didn't have to bend anyway. It all happened in Friday's doubleheader, when the Tigers started agrowlin' and scored a pair of runs. Owen, pinch hit for Pitcher Firpo Marberry, was passed and then chased all the way round to third on Billy Rogell's double. Petie Fox smashed one at Werber. But the Sox third sacker gobbled it up to get Owen at the plate.

TIGER BOSS ON WAY OUT; MUM ON SHIFT

By DAVID F. EGAN

The Red Sox, who still have the pernicious habit of losing ball games by one run, were to continue their series with the Detroit Tigers this afternoon at Fenway Park before engaging the St. Louis Browns in a series that will start with a double-header tomorrow.

Young Bucky Walters, whose injured hand has mended nicely, returned to his post at third base in the second game Friday, made a brilliant stop back of third base; and was to start the game this afternoon.

When he was injured in Cleveland almost three weeks ago it was thought that he would be out for the season, but the wound has practically healed and Master Walters is hankering to throw some more strikes from third to first.

SHOULD HELP SOX

His return should be of help to the ragged Red Sox, for until he was injured, Walters and Roy Johnson were delivering the punch in the pinches. They were concocting the runs which made the Sox a sensation for a few moments in the long campaign, and there is little doubt that the injury to Walters cost our boys several of those one run games.

Joe Judge though is on the injured list, and it is thought that the grizzled but still slick first-baseman is suffering from water on the knee. The old Colonel will report the matter to you in more detail later, just as soon as the doctor discovers the meaning of the swollen knee.

It is entirely too bad about the veteran first-baseman. He is fighting against the old fellow with the whiskers and scythe. It is a bitter struggle for all veterans to remain in the big league. It is especially bitter for Judge, who should now be on the roster of a club that is winning the American League pennant.

"All I want is a chance to fight for the first base job on the Red Sox club next year," he said last night. "I think that I can help the club, and naturally, I'll be helping myself. You know that I'm always in shape. Watch me next Spring."

Judge has a life-time batting average of more than .300, and was pole-axing them with great force and frequency until (1) he contracted the grippe, and (2) he came up with a gimpy leg. He'll be in there again next year, from all indications, for I haven't seen it announced that the Red Cross are buying first basemen anywhere.

PILOT SWAP?

Harris, so they say, will not be with the Tigers next year, even though his club will probably finish in the first division. He has the respect of every veteran baseball man with whom I've talked, and since baseball players are not overly inclined to give credit to other baseball players, that is high enough recommendation for yours most sincerely.

It is a certainty that he will be with some other major league club next year as manager, and there have been stories to the effect that he and McManus, who belong to the Mutual Admiration League, will swap jobs, with Bucky coming here and Marty going to Detroit, where he played for several years and is still an idol.

But everybody in a position to say anything about that is mum, and it is reported here simply as a rumor.

Mel Almeda, the young man from the Coast, who came here preceded by a great build-up, lived up to every advance prediction when he made his debut at center-field. He made two of the finest catches you or your Aunt Emma ever saw, made one clean-cut throw to third base and stood up at the bat like a major. He may be there. He [illegible]

Tribe Must Take Three From Cards to Climb

By JOE CASHMAN

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 9—Still in the grip of their longest and most discouraging losing streak of the year, our Braves move into sizzling St. Louis today for a four-game engagement with the fourth-place Cardinals, who haven't lost a game at home since Frankie Frisch became manager.

Now we'll get the low-down on this tribal slump. Is it due to the inferiority complex the Warriors always carry into Chicago, and only temporary, or is it the result of a complete collapse of the club and consequently permanent? The games here on this afternoon, two on the morrow and the fourth next Tuesday will tell the story.

If the Braves can't whip the Cards, they can't whip anybody and are destined to finish out of the money after their gallant flag fight. The Redbirds, on paper, look very bit as formidable as the Cubs, Giants or Pirates but they've been the softest set-ups in the loop for our boys. In their past twelve meetings, the McKechnie charges have finished in front no less than eleven times.

The Mound City outfit failed to win a game in its last two series in Boston and has taken only two games from the Wigwam entry at Sportsman's Park all season. In fact, it is the Warriors who are responsible for Frisch being the enemy pilot today. Gabby Street was carded to finish out the season until the Tribe won four out of five on their last visit here, then the Fordham flash was placed at the helm.

MUST WIN THREE

The Braves must win three out of four on this visit to take fourth place away from the natives.

That's a large-sized order for a club that hasn't turned in a victory in nine starts, but unless it comes through, it's chances of finishing in first division will be too slim to rate mention.

Second place was within easy reach of our heroes when they embarked on this western journey, but fourth is the highest they can hope to attain after dropping three in a row in the Windy City. Only by whipping the Cards and Pirates decisively and having the Giants come to the rescue by slapping down the Cubs can our heroes possibly rise above the lowest money rung.

The less said about the sad stay in the windy city the better, but to keep the records straight, it must be set down that the Warriors traditional hard luck on Wrigley Field had nothing to do with their 8 to 3 defeat in the closing battle. The sloppiest performance they have given in weeks led to their downfall. They had no excuse for failing to win by a comfortable margin.

Hal Lee permitted two runs by misjudging a fly and Joe Mowry did the same thing a few innings later. Buck Jordan made four hits, including a homer, but tossed away a marker by poor base-running and Pinky Whitney was guilty of the same crime. And errors of commission and omission made life miserable for the Tribal pitchers.

CANTWELL'S ARM SORE

Even Bill McKechnie had an off day. Ben Cantwell complained of a sore arm after hurling the frist three innings and after the Warriors had stepped on Guy Bush for two runs in the fourth to tie the score, pilot Bill instead of calling on a winning pitcher selected Leo Mangum, who had his ears pinned back in the sixth.

Bobby Brown made his third appearance of the year on the bill in the seventh. He was found for three straight hits and yanked. We still insist that Bob would be better off if he had been sent home to Nantasket early in the season to rest up until next spring.

U. S. Field Hockey Team Beats Wales

Copenhagen, Sept. 9 (AP)—The United States women's field hockey team, composed of players from Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York and Boston, today defeated Wales, 2 to 1 in the international tournament.

CELLI, ROSSI ON REVERE CARD

Boxing fans will more than get their money's worth at Promoter Solly Snyder's fight show at Revere Cycle Track, Revere, on Monday night. Some 3500 seats are on sale at 50 cents, with an additional 3000 at $1, with the result that a fine show will undoubtedly go over big.

The main bout would be a good one at any time, but it is even better, due to the fact that the winner will get a shot at Lou Brouillard some time next month. Tom Celli of Leominster and Tony Rossi of Worcester are opponents. The event is slated to go 10 rounds, but it is doubtful whether or not it will last that long.

In an eight-round semi-final Buster Price will meet Ernie Nyholm. Dick Madden and Henry Surrette will go to it for six rounds, and in addition there will be a couple of four-rounders.

Numa Looks for George's Title

Leo Numa, the former Black Secret, agreed to meet both Regis Siki and Bull Martin at the Arena next Wednesday night because he believes that a double victory will further his claim to a return shot at Ed Don George's wrestling title.

Numa is tackling a rugged assignment in facing Bull and Siki on the same night in the same ring, but he thinks he'll win both parts of this "double-header" grappling bout.

The ex-Black Secret must score a fall over each or be the loser and get the small end of the purse. McPherson is working on the rest of his card and announced today that there would be nine supporting bouts.

Trade Between Cards, Phils Involving Klein in Air

St. Louis, Sept. 9 (AP)—Talk of a big trade between the St. Louis Cardinals and the Philadelphia Phillies was in the air today, but those in a position to know whether there was anything to it had nothing to say.

The supposition was that the Cardinals were after Chuck Klein, who answers the description of the "slugging outfielder" Frankie Frisch has been talking about since becoming manager of the Cardinals.

Gerald Nugent, president of the Phillies, dropped in unexpectedly and wasn't here long until he was in a huddle with Sam Breadon, Cardinal president.

Baseball observers here [illegible] the Cardinals wanted Klein, shortstop Dick Bartell and catcher Virgil Davis and would give catcher Jimmy Wilson, several other players and a bundle of cash to get them.

Mal Stevens Foresees Many Football Deaths

New York, Sept. 9 (AP)—Dr. Marvin A. (Mal) Stevens, former head football coach and now freshman coach at Yale, today threw a bombshell into the annual rules interpretation meeting of the Eastern Intercollegiate Association when he said he expected again to see "30 or 40 deaths from football injuries this fall."

Addressing a meeting of coaches, officials and athletic directors on the "control and treatment of football injuries," Stevens said there was still much work to be done before there would be a noticeable decrease in the injuries and deaths from the game.

"There are still too many youngsters, especially on playground and high school teams, using inferior equipment and playing without proper supervision," he said in making his startling forecast.

He urged that a scientific campaign be inaugurated to cut down the injury toll in football and said his first suggestion would be the slogan, "Tackle High." A high tackle if properly made is just as effective as one at the knees where the tackle is exposed to serious injury, he believes.

He also urged that coaches discard the tackling dummy and accustom their players to being tackled [illegible] for a backfield man who hopes to go through the season without injury.

Dr. E. J. O'Brien, one of the East's best known football referees, spoke on the officials' part in helping to prevent injuries and said they could do little unless the school had competent trainers. As an example he told of two games where he was officiating and where after he had stopped the game because he thought a player was unable to continue the trainer had come on the field and then left the man in the game. In each instance Dr. O'Brien said the player was seriously injured shortly after.

H. A. (Fritz) Crisler, Princeton's head coach, told of his suggestions to his players for off-season exercises to strengthen muscles and joints susceptible to injury, and of the fine results he [illegible].

The meeting was in charge of Walter R. Okeson of [illegible] commissioner of the association and chairman of the football rules committee.

BECCALI BEATS LOVELOCK

Turin, Italy, Sept. 9 (AP)—Jack Lovelock, New Zealand Olympian, who recently set a world record for the mile, today was defeated by the Italian Olympic champion, Luigi Beccali, in the 1500-meter run at the International Inter-University track and field meet in Mussolini Stadium. Beccali won by three meters in the world record equaling time of 3 minutes 49.2 seconds.

Both Beccali and Lovelock, who set a record for the mile of 4 minutes 7.6 seconds in an inter-university meet at Princeton, N. J., in July, stayed off the early pace set by the Italian, Nanetti, and the British runner, Page.

As they passed the 800-meter mark the Italian and the New Zealander, running almost shoulder to shoulder, went around the field and waged a stirring duel to the finish line with Beccali just a bit the better and stronger in the final punishing meters.

The sensational duel had the packed stands in a frenzy. Beccali's triumph was received with unbridled enthusiasm.

Rumor Persists That Vines Will Join Tilden Troupe

New York, Sept. 9 (AP) Coincident with Henri Cochet's formal entrance into professional tennis came today a revival of reports, apparently well authenticated this time, that Ellsworth Vines likewise would quit the amateurs before the end of the year.

Despite denials, it was understood Vines has agreed to discuss terms as soon as he returns to California and that he will join Big Bill Tilden in a professional tour, competing against Cochet and Martin Plaa, perhaps as early as January in Madison Square Garden. Any formal announcement of his decision it was expected, would be delayed until after the Pacific Coast championships in which Fred Perry of England [illegible] will compete.

Cochet will make his professional debut in Paris Sept. 23 teaming with Plaa against Tilden and Bruce Barnes in a three day Franco-American series.

Swinging the Towel

By DAVID F. EGAN

'Twas a dog fight in the first round. There was a blazing old scar under Fuller's right eye early in the debate.

Among the prominent guests lending their voices and betting their bank-rolls on Petrolle were Mr. Abe Attell, the former bantamweight champion and Mr. Lou Smith, who runs the Rockingham races.

"I am seeing so many left hooks, declared Eddie Cummings, the announcer, "that I am thinking it is a mound duel between Lefty Grove and Carl Hubbell."

Fuller was comparatively cautious but then, your commentator would be more than comparatively cautious with a cobra that didn't know when he had enough.

They should have taken a picture of Petrolle in repose between rounds. He was the contented cow.

Then he'd go out and walk in like 40 fellows in a bread-line. It was a steady stream.

Fuller's face looked like a scrambled egg by the sixth round. Petrolle is a murderer at heart who has found a more lucrative profession.

Referee John Brassill got his money under false pretenses. There are no clinches when Petrolle is pegging punches.

Fuller made some furtive rallies, but mostly with a bewildered look on his face as if to say, "What am I doing here?"

Petrolle goes on and on and on like a columnist. Eight years ago he was declared "all washed up." Now they're considering putting him under the NRA.

Fuller made a gallant stand, and a driving finish in the last two rounds. The old shoe-shine boy, though, had his eyes blackened, were offering better and better competition. Jockeys Jack Westrope and Earl Porter settled down to the riding rivalry which is becoming a daily feature here. Porter was in the saddle in each of the eight races while Westrope accepted the issue on six.

Six horses went out for the opening race a 5½ furlongs sprint for 3-year-olds and up and Campbell Stable's Kai Finn ridden by Joe O'Malley took command rounding the stretch turn and won a length. Mrs. Edward McCuan's followed, three lengths better than Danny Shea's Tristrap. Tristrap saved the show money by a nose over Style Corner.

Kai-Finn justified the opinion of the experts by unloosing a burst of speed on the path for home, but was tiring at the end after the trip through the heavy going. His backers were rewarded with a payoff of $6.20 for each $2 ticket. Tristrap, the Boston horse, paid $5 to show. By the time the horses returned to the judges close to 12,000 people were on hand.

The crowd kept pouring into the grounds and more than 15,000 were on hand when Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Airy Spirit came from last place to win the second race a 5½ furlong outing which attracted a field of 12-year-olds. This gelded gray son of Coq-Airy Fairy was the favorite going to the post, and when he broke last a gasp went up.

But Jockey Robertson had a handful of real horse and Mrs. Whitney's famous fuchsia and purple silks traveled the overland route with determination, moved up in the final sixteenth and wore down Greentree Stable's Hideho, with Westrope up, to win by a length. Airy Spirit's effort was one of the best of the meeting to date. He paid $7.60 for the victory. William H. Gallagher's Morway was the show horse a short neck in front of Mrs. Sheldon H. Fairbanks' Regius.

PERRY REACHES TENNIS FINALS

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 9 (AP) England's Davis Cup ace, Frederick J. Perry, overwhelmed Lester Stoefen, powerful but inexperienced American youth, today in the first semi-final of the National Men's Singles championships. A capacity crowd of 14,500 saw Perry rout the Los Angeles tennis player, 6—3, 6—2, 6—2, and reach the finals for the first time.

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 9 (AP)—Fred Perry, British tennis ace, reiterated today he had no intention of turning professional, following the action of Henri Cochet in leaving amateur ranks and the expectation Ellsworth Vines will follow suit.

"Just tell them that Fred Perry is not interested," said Perry.

Hanson Is Winner on Hyannis Mat

Hyannis, Sept. 9—Charley Hanson took two straight falls from Fred Carone, Lynn, to win the feature bout at the Mill Hill arena. Hanson won the first fall in 19 minutes and 30 seconds with a head chancery, and the second in 10 minutes and 40 seconds with a top body press. Hank Barber, ex-Dartmouth football star, and Gene Ledoux, Montreal, wrestled to a rugged 30-minute draw in the semi-final.

KOZAK, HINES TIED FOR LEAD

Country Club, Glens Falls, N. Y., Sept. 9 (AP)—Walter Kosak of Flushing, L. I., and Jimmy Hines of Great River, L. I., were tied today for the lead at the three-quarter mark in the Glens Falls open golf tournament with 54-hole totals of 212.

Kosak, more erratic than in the first two rounds, when he shot 69, two under par, negotiated this 6372-yard layout in 74 today, and Hines, shooting steady golf, added a 73 to his 71 and 68.

Kodak was leader over Hines by a single stroke at the end of the first 36 holes.

Willie McFarlane, Tuckahoe, and Johnny Farrell, Mamaroneck, were tied for third place at 213, the result of a 68 and a 70 respectively today.

Tom Creavy, Albany, and Al Houghton, Bethesda, Md., each had 214 to hold fifth position as the final 18-hole round for the $3500 in prize money got under way.

Creavy's 68 was followed within ten minutes by two more par-breaking rounds. Jerry Gianferanti, of East Lexington, Mass., a comparative unknown among the prominent shotmakers, and Charles Lacey of Great Neck, L. I., each posted 70's.

YACHTS LEAVE FOR 'WHISTLER'

By E. B. SCHRIFTGIESSER

In the chill of a September morning, over a score of cruising yachts swung at their anchors in Manchester harbor this morning, ready for the starter's guns to send them away on the annual "hunt for the whistler" of the Boston chapter of the Cruising Club of America.

At 10 o'clock, the smallest boat in the fleet, Arthur Rotch's little yawl Retriever suddenly became the scene of action as the landlocked anchorage reverberated with a cannon shot.

From below decks the crew scrambled feverishly up the companionway, cast stops off the sails, swayed on the halyards and strove manfully with the anchor chain. Meanwhile down below some one was struggling with the engine, which after a few preliminary wheezes, coughed suspiciously and sent the yacht gently down the stream.

She was off, bound for Cape Cod and Jeffries ledge, on the 138-mile ocean race which each year attracts cruising craft to these waters.

At intervals, according to their handicaps, the rest of the fleet followed. Last of the Class B boats to get away was John Parkinson's Fisher Island sloop Praxilla, whose starting time was 1.57. Then came the larger Class A craft, headed by Paul Rust's white schooner Amberjack II. She seemed still a little self-conscious as she moved down the fairway, for neither she nor her crew have forgotten that last spring she was the flagship of President Roosevelt.

Finally, the scratch boat of the fleet, the transatlantic schooner Nina, now under charter to W. J. Anderson of Marblehead, was due to get under way.

The later start this year—7 a. m. used to be starting time—is necessitated by the tide. It means that the winners will not arrive home until tomorrow afternoon unless they get the best of favoring winds all the way. The race is a handicap affair, and as competitors are allowed to use their motors part of the way, even calms fail to delay them very severely.

The most interesting part of the entire contest is always the search for the whistler on Jeffries Ledge. Even with a brilliantly lighted Coast Guard patrol boat tied to the buoy the deep sea navigators usually have all kinds of trouble in finding it. In spite of the club's imposing name its members seldom include enough able seamen to man all the yachts, let alone men who are able to work a traverse. Social rather than nautical accomplishments figure largest among the club's entrance requirements.

SAMMY FULLER WINS 1 ROUND; IS GIVEN DRAW

By JACK CONWAY

Billy Petrolle did about everything to Sammy Fuller but knock him out in their ten-round bout before 5000 fans at the Boston Garden. By some strange process of reasoning the officials only gave Petrolle a draw.

Referee Johnny Brassill voted for Petrolle, Judge Tom Grady cast his ballot for Fuller, while Judge Johnny Glacken ruled in favor of a draw.

Petrolle won nine out of the ten rounds. Fuller had the third session by an edge. Every other round saw Petrolle out front.

SAMMY LUCKY

I cannot understand how a boxing judge who saw what happened in the Garden ring could come to the conclusion Fuller won. The North End lightweight was fortunate to go the distance. His right eye was badly cut, while his face was marked and bruised from the effects of the Fargo Express' punches.

It was a Fuller crowd, but boos greeted the decision. The weird finding had the crowd dazed for a few minutes. It was difficult for them to realize that Petrolle had only received a draw after having licked Fuller from here to Chicago.

Petrolle, a throwback to the old school of fighters, shifted his attack from the body to the head and then back to the body. He pulled away from Fuller's wild swings, and countered with savage smashes. He even let Sammy hit him so that he could get into position to cut loose with one of his savage swings.

There was little action in the first part of the first round. In the middle of the heat, Petrolle drove a heavy left hook to the jaw. It staggered Sammy, but the latter came back with a two fisted attack. The veteran Petrolle got inside of Fuller's swings, and continued to force the issue to the bell. Petrolle had a slight margin.

The high spot in the second round was a Petrolle right hand uppercut to the jaw. The Fargo Express countered with this smash after Fuller missed with a right hand swing.

The third was a stirring round. Petrolle pumped an overhand right to the jaw, when whanged away at Sammy's body. Fuller came back with a series of right-hand uppercuts to the head. He also cracked a hard right to the jaw. Petrolle refused to back away, and there was a wild exchange of punches at close quarters.

TRADE PUNCHES

There was very little action in the fourth round until the last 20 seconds of fighting when the rivals stood in the center of the ring and traded right-hand punches. Fuller refused to give an inch of ground to his heavier opponent.

The Fargo Express the throttle wide open, thundered out front in the sixth round. He pounded Fuller around the head and body. Sammy had a bad wound over his right eye.

Fuller flashed for a minute in the seventh round and scored with lefts and rights to the head. Petrolle came back with a savage body attack, then lifted his punches to the jaw.

FULLER GOES DOWN

Petrolle uncorked an overhand right which landed on Fuller's jaw. Sammy's feet shot into space and he crashed to the canvas. He was on his feet before Referee Brassill could start to count. Fuller made a gallant fight until the final gong sounded, scoring with some solid blows.

Charley Retzlaff of Duluth, Minn., weighing 192 pounds, won the decision over Gene Stanton of Cleveland in a seven-round bout. It was a colorless and uninteresting bout. The fans booed the boxers repeatedly.

Romano came out of his corner fighting in the fourth round. He forced Arcelli back under a shower of left hooks. Romano slipped and fell to the canvas. Arcelli, in his excitment, struck Romano with a left hook to the jaw while the latter was on the canvas. Referee Brassill warned Arcelli. Brassill made certain Romano had not been injured severely by the punch before he let the boys resume boxing.

In the sixth heat, Arcelli nailed Romano with another to the button, but failed to drop his man.

The crowd yelled for a draw, and applauded wildly when this was the and Judge Johnny Glacken voted a draw, while Judge Tom Grady cast his ballot for Arcelli.

I thought Arcelli had the edge.

Johnny Renda of Chelsea won over Tommy Smoot fo South Boston in six rounds. Smoot was cut over the right eye and also on the nose. This caused the referee to halt the contest.

GUILFORD TOPS N. E. ACES AFTER LINKS CROWN

By BILL GRIMES

En Route to Cincinnati, Sept. 9.—Now that Emery P. Stratton and Charlie Crane have demonstrated their superiority in the fourth annual Charles River Country Club member and guest invitation I am off to cover the 37th United States amateur championship, which starts at the Kenwood Country Club on Monday.

Bill Grimes

There are 10 New Englanders at Kenwood Country Club, including Jesse P. Guilford, Woodland, the 1921 national titlist; Joe Lynch, holder of the State championship; Freddie Wright, six times winner of the amateur crown of the good old Bay State; Eddie Kirouac, ex-State titleholder; Bill Blaney, a former New England amateur champion; Wilfred Crossley, the runner-up to Johnny Fischer, who was medalist in the qualifying rounds at Five Farms last season; Jimmy Dolan representing Green Hill, Worcester; Phil Simons, Springfield; Dow Ahern and Bobby Grant, from Connecticut.

The Kenwood Country Club was established in 1929 and is a 36-hole layout. For the amateur championship the Kenwood committee selected the best 18 holes of the two courses. The championship course measures approximately 6300 yards and is par 72.

66 IS RECORD

Johnny Fischer, the ex-intercollegiate champion who topped the field in the qualifying round a year ago at Baltimore, is the holder of the amateur record at Kenwood, a 66. To a certain extent Kenwood is a trick course and moreover the boys will experience plenty of trouble putting the bent greens.

C. Ross Somerville, representing the London (Ont.) Hunt Club, is the defending champion. Although he had played in many U. S. amateur titular events, Somerville never went through until last at Baltimore, where he defeated Johnny Goodman, the current U. S. open title holder, 2 and 1.

Sandy Somerville is 30 years of age and is the best golfer ever developed in the Dominion of Canada. He was the Canadian amateur champion in 1926, '28, '30 and '31 and the runner-up in 1924 and 1925. In 1930 Ross Somerville was the runner-up in the North and South at Pinehurst and was the first wearer of the Maple Leaf to win the United States title.

FISCHER FAVORITE

Out around Cincinnati the golf enthusiasts cannot see any player in the field but Johnny Fischer. Fischer is a great golfer, one of the best in fact, but despite his knowledge of Kenwood and the fact that he is the holder of the course record Johnny has his work cut out for him getting through the field that will qualify. Due to his victory in the U. S. open at the North Shore Golf Club out in Glenview, Ill., Johnny Goodman will not want for supporters next week.

With more than 150 of the best amateurs in the country fighting for the 32 qualifying berths, the New Englanders are not given much consideration. Other than Francis Ouimet, who had an off day at Brae Burn, New England is represented by the cream of golfers in that section.

The 37th United States amateur championship will open with a 36-hole qualifying round on Monday and Tuesday, and the low 32 scorers will start match play on Wednesday and continue until Ross Somerville, 7 and 6.

Leonard Advises Canzoneri to Box Rather Than Slug

New York, Sept. 9 (AP)—Take it from Benny Leonard who ought to know, Tony Canzoneri had better place his reliance on boxing skill rather than hitting power if he wants to regain his lightweight championship from Barney Ross at the Polo Grounds Tuesday night.

Himself one of the greatest lightweight title-holders in pugilistic history, Leonard thinks Tony will make a serious mistake if he fights Ross with the idea of putting the Chicagoan away.

"Tony is as clever a boxer as he wants to be," Benny said after watching the challenger work out at Pompton Lakes, N. J., yesterday, "and he ought to stick to it.

"Of late he has been trying to knock out his opponents. He shouldn't do that with Ross for he is liable to find himself outboxed by the fast, clever, champion."

The Roving Eye

An enterprising newspaperman hurried to the chambers of Judge James A. Lowell on the [illegible] floor of the Federal Building to [illegible] know if an important defendant had been arraigned.

Judge Lowell turned to his secretary and asked that all the record closets in the room be opened.

"You see," said the jurist, "the defendant is not here. I am always uncertain of what a newspaperman wants or thinks. But just to keep the record straight I let them prowl around and look everywhere. It's simpler."

And No Butts

Admiral William S. Sims and his family are spending the summer at Newport and recently attended an art exhibit there. Among the paintings was one very futuristic work called "The Goat on the Roof."

The Admiral looked at it a long time; not very sympathetically.

"Of course there is no goat on that roof, if it is a roof," said the Admiral. "The goat is the person foolish enough to stand looking for his brother."

BOY SCOUTS IN BUY NOW DRIVE

Washington, D. C., Sept 9 (US)—Dr. James E West, chief executive of the Boy Scouts of America, today had issued an order mobilizing the country's million Scouts in support of the Buy Now movement.

"All who have money available will be asked to swell the tide of returning prosperity by making such purchases as they can to replenish their wardrobes, or to add to the furnishings of their homes, or to repair or replace their automobiles and radios or to paint and repair wherever there is opportunity.

"The scouts have already had a very definite part in various local 'renovating' campaigns. This national effort will make it possible for local council officials in conference with local representatives of the NRA to develop ways and means whereby the Boy Scouts of America may be of service."

RUTH ETTING IS ON AIR WITH DURANTE

By N. E. T.

Leave it to the one and only George Cohan to shape another crackerjack "mike" offering with which to hold forth during his regular Sunday night half hour (WBZ) starting at 9 o'clock. Ruth Etting, with her sweetest of sweet radio voices, will be included, not forgetting the comedy jabber-jabber that made Jimmy Durante famous. As for George M. Cohan himself, he has just written another of those original New Deal dedication songs and calls it "Clear Weather" in tribute to the Blue Eagle. It will be sung for the first time tomorrow night.

In addition, one more of those fast moving popular song revues takes place as Cohan contributes "The Rise of Rosie O'Reilly" and "I Want to Hear a Yankee Doodle Tune" while the Revellers Quartet lends a special arrangement background.

Some network celebrities of the NBC outfit are stepping up to speak a piece late tonight (WEEI) while the entire nation wide chain of stations salute WSB of Atlanta, Georgia. It seems they are getting started with a new 50,000 watt transmitter down in the Dixie City, hence the big celebration. It's sort of "Old Home Week" for many of those taking part, namely, Milton J. Cross, Phillips Carlin, Bill Hay, Graham McNamee and others. Music is to be by the orchestra under S. L. Rothapfel direction, or "Roxy" is perhaps the name by which he is better known.

That "Church of the Air" feature heard each Sabbath (WNAC) and sustained by the Columbia System, enters upon its third broadcasting year tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. Every denomination known to the religious world has been honored and will continue to be as the series carries on.

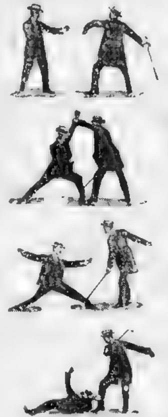
FRISBY CLEARS UP MISUNDERSTANDING



Washington - Congressman Horace Frisby, using an ordinary walking stick, has posed for the above series of educational pictures. "My idea," says Frisby, "is to show in as few words as possible what I meant months ago when I said I was an advocate of technocracy. Many people apparently did not understand what I had in mind. All I ever said was that I believed technocracy, or something like it, was well worth trying in a crisis."

Financial Advertising Men Plan Convention

New York, Sept. 9—New York City will play host next week to the 18th annual convention of the Financial Advertisers Association, registration for which will start tomorrow at the Waldorf-Astoria.

The theme chosen for the convention—"Public Relations"—is complementary to the discussions at the American Bankers Association convention at Chicago and is expected to attract a considerable number of delegates who have been in attendance at that meeting. Special trains are also bringing delegates from New England, the Middle Atlantic and the Southern States.

The broader aspects of public relations as distinct from the trade problems of publicity and advertising will be developed in a symposium that will occupy the general sessions of the convention opening Tuesday.

Lewis E. Pierson, chairman of the Irving Trust Co., will welcome the delegates at the session on behalf of the Merchants Association of New York and, following the president's response by H. A. Lyon, advertising manager of the Bankers' Trust Co., Edward Elliott, vice president, Security First-National Bank of Los Angeles, will open the discussion with an address on "The Banker's Relations With Law makers."

Col. Allan M. Pope, president of First of Boston Corp. and a former president of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, will then present the investment banker's viewpoint in a paper on the Investment Bankers' Obligation to the Public.

Bayard Pope, chairman of the advisory committee of the Marine Midland Trust Co. of New York, will lead off the [illegible] Wednesday morning with his conception of "What the [illegible] Expect of Its [illegible]" The [illegible] banking personnel for the public attitude toward a banking institution will then be developed by John Puelicher, president of the Marshall & Ilsley Bank of Milwaukee and a former president of the American Bankers' Association. His paper is entitled "Public Relations for the Bank's Staff."

The situation confronting the banks in Detroit preceding and during the Michigan banking crisis will be high-lighted in the next address on the program—"When the Public Has Lost Confidence, What Can We Do?" by James I. Walsh, vice president of the National Bank of Detroit.

Three speakers are scheduled for the final general session on Thursday morning. Guy Emerson, vice president of the Bankers Trust Co.; Henry Bruere, president of the Bowery Savings Bank, and T. R. Preston, president of the Hamilton National Bank of Chattanooga and a past president of the A. B. A. The topics of their addresses are Mr. Emerson, "The Public Responsibility for a Sound Banking System"; Mr. Bruere, "A Business Man Comes into Banking," and Mr. Preston, "The Customer's Responsibility to the Bank."

MARKET VIEWS IN STATE ST.

Elmer H. Bright & Co.—It is believed that as ability to buy goods returns to the large masses of the people through increased employment, this will be reflected in the reports of retail trade and will form the basis for a continued and extended and well maintained upward turn in the great industries of the country.

Hayden, Stone & Co.—We are not so much impressed by the market's failure to rally, as we are by its stability in the face of lack of constructive day-to-day news. The waiting period is fully evident in the stock market, but we believe the outlook fully warrants a substantial position in equities and a patient attitude.

Hornblower & Weeks—Until the market by its action definitely indicates completion of the current reactionary tendencies we would simply stand aside insofar as short term commitments are concerned and await further developments.

G. M. P. Murphy & Co.—We still see little reason for adopting a more optimistic policy.

Clark, Childs & Keech—Although neither has been in large volume, it appears that the buying of stocks has been of much better quality than the selling. It is the small operator rather than the large investor who has become discouraged by the market's lethargic action.

Commonwealth & So. Power Output Rises

Electric output of Commonwealth & Southern Corporation System for August was 483,576,705 k. w. h. against 407,779,981 k. w. h. for August, 1932, an increase of 18.59 per cent. For the eight months ended August 31, 1933, output was 3,519,202,697 k. w. h., against 3,348,353,101 k. w. h. during the corresponding period of 1932, an increase of 5.10 per cent. Total output for the year ended August 31, 1933, was 5,241,251,403 k. w. h., against 5,213,014,181 for 12 months ended August 31, 1932, an increase of 54 100ths of 1 per cent.

The code is frankly an experiment and is limited in its present form to a period of 90 days. If it sticks or is the basis of a permanent code to follow later, it will establish for the first time peace and order in a chaotic and continuously harassed industry. Obviously the provisions of the code will have a highly favorable effect upon companies and their stocks.

Reserve Pushes Credit Expansion

The purchase of $37,000,000 more government securities by the reserve banks in the week ended Wednesday continued the rate of credit expansion begun three weeks ago, but insofar as the present week is concerned the purchases failed to show any increase in excess reserves. This was due entirely to the temporary factor of currency expansion over the Labor Day holiday combined with the usual month-end factor.

Selling in Armour Is Petering Out

Selling pressure against Armour & Co. of Illinois preferred, brought about by speculative selling over disappointment of the reorganization plan to materialize, is apparently petering out. EXCHANGE PUTS CRAWFORD OUT

New York, Sept. 9 (INS)—Edward A. Crawford, the big Wall Street trader who crashed with the markets in July, was today expelled from the New York Cotton Exchange for failure to comply with rules regarding insolvency.

Crawford lost millions in the spectacular break in stock and commodity markets in July. He was reputed to have cornered rye as well as having enormous long positions in wheat, sugar and stocks.

He recently came to an agreement with his creditors and is planning a comeback.

Crawford is an ex-New Orleans doctor who got his start in cotton and from there went into huge speculation in other markets.

UP TO BANKS TO AID BUSINESS, SAYS HANEY

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University

New York, Sept. 9—The part which the banks should play in our recovery experiment is probably one of the most difficult to decide. This question was bound to come up at the present time.

We all know that credit has been a major factor in our business affairs. Its abuse was apparent in the boom. Most of the attempts to bring recovery have involved schemes to liquidate frozen credit or stimulate the use of more credit.

But the banks are the chief machines of business credit. Even government credit requires the aid of banks. So most plans to stimulate business comes to the banks sooner or later.

The fact is that most of the banks today are in what would ordinarily be called a good liquid condition. There are still a good many which have not recovered from the crash, but the reporting member banks of the Reserve System show large deposits in comparison with loans and great excess reserves. Money rates are very low.

Yet bank loans have expanded relatively little. They have not kept pace with deposits or with the recent spurt in business.

So we now find the NRA in a critical attitude, and trying to force the banks to "loosen up."

A good many manufacturers and merchants have accumulated inventories, and the higher prices and costs which have been caused by government policies make them want more credit. Some, too, want to buy goods in anticipation of higher prices, which requires credit.

The government argues that credit should be extended to enable business men to carry inventories pending the hoped for increase in consumer buying. It also thinks that more credit in the shape of bank loans would help to stimulate business.

But the bankers reply that they know their business. They say that they have every incentive to make loans, and are doing so in all cases in which the loan is reasonably safe.

They consider their first duty is to their depositors and that if they make unsafe loans, depositors will suffer losses.

They ask how loans can be safe when there is a probability or even a possibility that the value of the loan would be reduced by inflation so that the borrower would not return as much purchasing power as was lent to him.

And they ask why, if the NRA is an experiment, they should risk the depositors' money in backing it?

To this the government officials reply that there are ample bank resources, and that banks should play a positive part in putting NRA over. They should seek to stimulate business by going after loans more freely.

Indeed, it seems that some officials are threatening that if loans are not made by banks as they desire the government will itself go into the banking business to an even greater extent. The old R. F. C. is coming into the picture again by encouraging the weaker banks to issue preferred stock which the government would buy, thus giving the issuing banks more funds to lend.

So the matter stands. My only suggestion is that we should remember that credit is not capital. Credit is a debt secured by a promise to pay, the goodness of which depends upon the use to which pre-existing capital is put. The question is, who is the best judge of that?

State St. Showing Effect of Recent Inactive Markets

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

State St. boardrooms are beginning to show the effect of recent sloppy price movements. Empty chairs are seen in brokerage houses where standing room has so recently been at a premium. And it may be attributed to the old saw that the public cannot stand inactivity. Big markets will bring them back, but one should not expect these until accumulators have filled their bags with the choice offerings.

Technically the market has worked itself into a corner. A great many observers are contending the stalemate cannot last much longer. If sufficiently large lines of stocks have been accumulated by leading market interests a definite upswing would be in order. But few care to hazard a guess on that score. Much better to look over the list for likely buys and be prepared for a definite bull [illegible] ral.

AVERAGES KEY TO FUTURE

The safest course for the average trader to follow seems to be in the direction of the popular hourly market averages. These as we noted yesterday are being squeezed between the lows of Wednesday and the down trending moving averages. The latter have now fallen to a point where a lift across 100 and 49.75 would constitute a good buying pointer.

From a strictly personal viewpoint it would be pleasing to see the lows of Wednesday broken. A decline to around 90-91 would then be indicated. Such a happening would go a long way toward clearing the atmosphere and furnish a good base for rousing upturn. Then we could feel certain of enlarged bear and shrunken bull accounts.

Until a clearer picture is obtainable nothing will be added to our hypothetical list of future purchases. As now constituted it includes store, gold, motor and amusement issues. In the event of a sudden swift turn these will do for emergency buying. But from present indications we need not worry about being left behind.

Usually informed gossip is playing down inflation. Supposedly high administration officials are afraid Congress will attempt a mandatory program. This means the discretionary powers to inflate must be played down in order to prevent the thing from becoming overdone. The reasoning is attractive.

Our comments anent the NRA and spare time, which were hooked up with amusement shares brought a few comments and a few suggestions. We borrowed the first from someone. The sequel which appeals to us concerns itself with the cigarette stocks. Fancy statistical tricks may be done with consumption figures on the spare time basis.

One of the most talked of stocks in town is Celluloid. Curb listed. Less than 200,000 common shares outstanding. And almost 125,000 of these are said to be owned by Celanese. Back preferred dividends are owed on less than 50,000 first and second $7 stock. Assets nearly $3,500,000. Liabilities less than $68,000. Remember this is what we hea[illegible]

Volume of Rayon Orders Is Large

Volume of orders for November rayon yarn received since opening of books September 2 indicates that production for that month will be sold up in a very short time. Both knitters and weavers came in for substantial quantities of yarn during the week. While mill executives have felt for some weeks that volume of business must start to recede shortly consuming trades assuring them that no let-down is in sight and that the huge demand is well founded.

SURVEY SHOWS PAYROLLS AND HIRING UP

New England Rise in Plant Activity Is Registered

Employment and payrolls showed further increases in August over July in all parts of the country, and business sentiment improved generally, according to the monthly business survey of International Business Machines Corporation compiled from late August reports of 1,500 field representatives of the company throughout the country.

The outlook for fall business is regarded as more promising than it has been for some years, the survey stated.

Manufacturing activity in the United States during August as compared with July showed no decrease in any of the nine geographic divisions of the country, according to the survey. It increased in four divisions, the New England, Middle Atlantic, East South Central and Pacific States and it showed no change in the remaining five, namely, the East North Central, West North Central, South Atlantic, West South Central and Mountain States.

Wholesale trade likewise reported no decreases in any division, but it was unchanged in the New England, the Middle Atlantic, the East North Central, the West North Central, the South Atlantic and the Mountain States, and showed improvement over the previous month in the East South Central, the West South Central and the Mountain States. Collections were better everywhere except in the New England and South Atlantic States where they were unchanged.

While activity in the iron and steel industry eased somewhat during the early part of August following three and a half months of rapid expansion, the decline was not as great as normally occurs toward the end of summer, the survey said.

Already a number of steel works and rolling mills report a pick-up, bringing their rates of operation back close to the July peak.

Iron and steel producers expect this improvement to widen throughout their industry with the receipt of orders looked for from railroads and the automobile and construction industries, and also upon the general acceleration anticipated in all industry now that most of the major problems in connection with NRA codes have been settled.

The survey reported agricultural conditions over the country as "satisfactory" with improvements in bank deposits and retail and mail orders sales that should become more pronounced as the harvesting season advances.

Loan Restrictions on Policies Dropped

Restrictions on policy loans and surrender values under life insurance contracts and annuities imposed by the New York Insurance Department on March 9, 1933, and modified from time to time thereafter, have been withdrawn by ruling of the New York department effective at once, for the reason that the conditions that necessitated the limitation have now passed.

Copper Buying Quiet, Tonnage Is Moderate

Copper buying was quiet abroad and here. Some copper was sold in the domestic market at 9 cents, delivered, but the tonnage was moderate.

Electrolytic for domestic shipment is [illegible] at 9 cents a pound delivered to the end of 1933. European destinations are at 8 to 8.05 cents c. i. f., Hamburg, Havre and London.

Sugar Melt of 12 U. S. Refiners Shows Gain

Sugar melt of 12 United States refiners from January 1 to September 2 totaled 2,735,000 long tons, against 2,690,000 in thes ame period of 1932.

Deliveries for the same period totaled 2,495,000 long tons, against 2,550,000 a year ago.

New Questionnaire Is for Customers' Men

In line with previous regulations governing employment of customers' men and branch office managers by member firms, New York Stock Exchange has given members a questionnaire to be answered by prospective employes. This is in addition to the questionnaire used for a number of years.

The first four questions require an outline of previous training, definition of a customers' man and his duties and certification that the candidate is conversant with stock exchange rules.

Question No. 5 follows: (a) May a customers' man have a direct or indirect interest in a speculative account? (b) May a customers man guarantee the account of a customer? If so, under what conditions? (c) May a customers' man take or receive a share of profits of any customers' account? If so, under what conditions? (d) May a customers' man lead any customer to believe he will not suffer a loss as result of opening an account?

Questions 6 to 10 follow: (6) May a customers' man receive a commission on a sale of listed stocks? If so, under what conditions? (7) May a customers' man receive a commission on the sale of listed bonds or unlisted stocks or bonds? If so, under what conditions? (8) May a customers' man engage in any employment or have any connection as an officer or director other than that of the member employing him? If so, under what terms? (9) Do you trade for your own account or do you directly or indirectly have an interest in any speculative account? (10) May a customers' man accept a discretionary account from a customer? If so, under what terms?

The following questions are to be answered by prospective branch office managers: (1) What steps would you take to investigate a new customer or account? (2) Under what conditions would you accept an account from an employee of a bank or insurance company?

PRICE CHANGES ONLY NARROW FOR LEADERS

New York, Sept. 9 Price changes for leading shares on the New York Stock Exchange today were only narrow for the most part. The market was virtually a lifeless affair on the resumption of Saturday trading today.

Numerous leaders were late in appearing on the ticker tape and issues traded were generally unchanged to a shade above yesterday's closing prices.

Shares steady to slightly higher included U. S. Steel, Liggett & Myers B, Santa Fe, New York Central, National Biscuit, International Telephone and General Motors.

Followers of the oil shares were awaiting with much interest the scheduled conference Monday at Washington between President Roosevelt and Harold L. Ickes, secretary of the interior and acting oil administrator.

While there has been a wide divergence of opinion in the industry as to the method which may be adopted by the administration in applying its price-fixing powers, sentiment now is apparently more optimistic than when the code arguments firs tstarted.

Sales to 11 a. m. approximately 120,000 shares.

In the first hour the main body of stocks showed very small changes in very dull trading. American Telephone, Industrial Rayon, and Drug, were off fractionally.

Point gains appeared for National Distillers, U. S. Industrial Alcohol, National Steel and Union Pacific. Atchison sold off a half point. U. S. Steel was churned over at a minor fractional net decline. Amerada was down a point.

The dollar continued to improve in foreign exchange transactions. The British pound sterling was off 1⅞ cents at $4.52⅛. French farncs sagged .07½ of a cent at 5.50 cents and the other European gold currencies were heavy.

The eyes of Wall St. were not neglecting the encouraging implications of increasing employment and the steadily growing volume of retail buying which is being reported from various parts of the United States.

Week-end trade reviews stress the fact that higher prices in a number of categories, due to the application of NRA codes and other factors, apparently have not made any great impression on the renewal of retail demand. The "buy now" movement, as an aid to the recovery program, it is said, is being felt by virtually all lines of goods.

The following have been admitted by the stock exchange: Bristol-Myers Co., $5 par stock; Sterling Products, Inc., $10 par stock; Vick Chemical, Inc., $5 por; Life Savers Corp., $5 par stock; United Drug, Inc., $5 par stock; Wabash Railway Co. certificates of deposit for refunding and general mortgage bonds: Series "A" 5¼ per cent, due March 1, 1975; series "B" 5 per cent, due Aug. 1, 1976; series "C" 4½ per cent, due April 1, 1978, and series "D" 5 per cent, due April 1, 1980.

August Reports Tell Store Sales' Gain

Sales reports for August made by 10 chain store groups indicate that gains over 1932 in retail buying in the United States became wider in August than they were in July. These chains' sales were higher than they were in July, 1933, or in August last year. Their increases over the 1932 month ranged as high as 32.4 per cent.

August sales of these stores aggregated $62,363,994, comparing with $53,463,412 in August last year, up 16.7 per cent, and with $60,063,856 in July, a gain of 3.8 per cent. August, 1932, sales of this group were 1.3 per cent under those of the preceding month.

A 32.16 per cent gain over August, 1932, by J. C. Penney brought the group's sales in the first eight months above the figure for the like period a year ago. Sales in the eight months amounted to $451,690,250, as against $450,018,822 in the first eight months of 1932, an increase of 17-100 of 1 per cent.

Only three companies other than Penney gained over 1932 in the eight months.

Investment Trust Quotations Are Off

Investment trust securities were slightly lower during the past week. The average for the common stocks of the five leading management trusts, influenced by the leverage factor, as compiled by Allied-Distributors, Inc., stood at 17.23 as of Sept. 8, compared with 18.94 on Sept. 1. The low for the current year to date was 8.22 on March 31.

The average of the non-leverage stocks stood at 14.26 as of the close Sept. 8, compared with 15.06 at the close on Sept. 1. The average of the mutual funds closed at 11.32, compared with 11.67.

Walgreen Co. Sales Up 15.1 Per Cent

The Walgren Co. reports sales for August at $4,216,883, compared with $3,663,055 for August, 1932, an increase of 15.1 per cent. Sales in July showed an increase of 9.8 per cent over July, 1932. Sales for eight months totaled $29,801,019, compared with $30,950,528, a decrease of 3.7 per cent.

Demand for Steel Quiet; Fear Is Gone

Deliberation continues among buyers of steel. They are not putting out inquiries. Neither are they specifying as freely as a month or more ago, indicating manufacturers using steel are not meeting an active demand just now.

Prices have been announced for remainder of the third quarter under the NRA code. It is evident that consumers are not worried about possibility of any sharp advance on fourth-quarter deliveries. This is due primarily to the fact that some steel interests favor opening their books for October, November and December business at prevailing quotations.

However, other leaders in the industry insist higher prices are justified, and maintain their views will be confirmed by experiences under the code the next two months.

Wage costs have been sharply increased since the middle of July. With production on the down grade, the wage question becomes more acute. Overhead always is higher when output is diminishing. Compilation of results under the code may convince many that quotations should be lifted.

There was considerable talk a few weeks ago of a prospective increase in buying after Labor Day. Only a short time has elapsed, and it would not be likely that an expansion in buying would show so soon. However, there is no evidence of any increase shortly, because consumers are remaining out of the market.

The diminution in demand started with the first uncertainty over adoption of the code, and nothing has happened since to change the position of the consumer. Buyers know the products can be obtained when required and that deliveries can be made on short notice. Therefore they are unwilling to purchase ahead, since fears of price advances have disappeared.

The heavier products are not showing many signs of activity. There has been a moderate amount of rail buying, but structural steel awards continue light, though inquiries for shapes are somewhat in excess of the past month or two. The industry requires tonnage, and this should come from heavier lines to give operations the support needed.

A falling off in demand for the higher articles is keenly felt. It was the buying of these which did much to start the uptrend in operations last spring. Probably then there was some speculative purchasing, but this has disappeared and demand now is confined to actual requirements.

Automobile companies continue to specify rather freely against old contracts, but have not started new buying. Information in the steel trade is that numerous companies are designing new models and will concentrate efforts in this direction for the time being. Therefore demand will depend upon the outlook and promise of public buying of cars.

Tin plate mills continue most active, with operations better than 90 per cent of capacity. The specifications have continued large. New buying has been checked at least temporarily by the advance of 40 cents a base box under the code, bringing the price to $4.65 a box.

OIL NOW NEAR ICKES' GOAL

Tulsa, Okla., Sept. 9 (AP) As a result of a 15-cent increase now effective midcontinent crude oil rested today within a short step of the $1.11 Secretary Ickes, the oil administrator, has indicated he considers a fair top price.

Top gravity Oklahoma and Kansas crude was worth 97 cents a barrel after an unprecedented swarm of new postings. Oil in other midcontinent districts was increased 10, 12 and 15 cents as virtually every company of consequence agreed to the advance.

There ere published reports here today another 15-cent increase may be epected during tht day or around the first of next week at the latest.

Top prices for districts other than Oklahoma and Kansas were: North and north central Texas, north Louisiana and Arkansas, 92 cents; east Texas, 90 cents; Panhandle Texas, 7 cents and 81 cents (Gray County grade); Gulf coast Texas-Louisiana, 99 cents and $1.01; west Texas Permian basin, 60 cents and 65 cents; Conroe, $1.09.

U. S. Seeking to Spur Rail Buying

Initial step in what appears to be program to stimulate heavy industries, which have lagged behind the general recovery pace, has been launched in a plan to have railroads borrow from Public Works Administration for rail replacements. President Roosevelt is taking this up through Co-ordinator Eastman and has talked it over with railroad representatives.

The proposition is dependent on a reduction in price of rails. The President regards maintenance of uniform prices for rails throughout the depression as an anomaly.

Aside from assisting heavy industries, the program would be of material benefit to railroads and manufacturers of track fastenings. President Roosevelt understands the railroads are eager to buy rails.

Loans for purchase of rails is the only thing in contemplation as far as railroads are concerned. At this stage it does not include equipment purchases.

Plan to Release Gold at World Price

Word received at Ketchikan, Alaska, from E. A. White, manager of the Tacoma, Wash., smelter of American Smelting & Refining Co., that company would pay the world price for gold ore, will have effect of releasing concentrates and ore from Alaskan operators. They have been holding back shipments. New impetus has been given to gold mining in Alaska as result of allowing gold to seek world price, old properties, which have not been worked in years, being recapitalized.

Another Upturn for Business Forecast

The current slackening in the pace of recovery is likely to bring forth additional artificial stimulants from Washington, says the United Business Service of Boston. Forced credit expansion is named as the next inflationary step. This will cause further increases in commodity prices, which will compensate for the higher producing costs now hampering industrial profits. Another rise in business activity is expected to result. This upturn should be under way by October.

The upturn in employment and payrolls is a noteworthy achievement which means a larger amount of money available for consumer buying, the United Business Service points out. Retail sales are moving up. Department store volumes are running 8 per cent above a year ago, according to the New York Times. This is the best comparative showing in three years.

A serious problem is still present in connection with the volume of finished products that can be consumed, says the United Service. This is the matter of price increases. If goods are marked up as much as consumer income grows, no greater volumes can materialize. So far, the price raises at retail have been less than the boost in consumer income. It is expected that this trend will continue for a while, at least, and that there will be a net increase in real purchasing power.

To Ask Trustees for Western Road

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will file a motion next Tuesday in U. S. District Court, asking immediate appointment of trustees to take over and operate Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, it was announced in Washington. The motion, it was said, will indicate that the road owes the R. F. C. $5,775,000, exclusive of interest, to date.

Appointment of trustees to operate the road and effect a reorganization of its capital structure would be in accord with the discretionary provision of the amended bankruptcy law, it was pointed out. The panel of names from which trustees, possibly two, would be selected, has already been announced by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The motion will be the second of its kind made within the past two weeks by the Reconstruction R. F. C. against roads owing it money. A similar move was proposed for St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad.

LOWELL WATER MAIN BREAK TIES UP CITY

Lowell, Sept. 9—A 16-inch water main burst at the junction of Merrimack and Cabot sts. early today, completely tying up traffic at this point for many hours.

Merrimack st. was roped off for three blocks as a result of the upheaval, which tore a hole 40 feet in diameter in the roadway.

One of the freak incidents connected with the bursting of the pipe was the disappearance of the automobile of Asst. Supt. of Water Department James M. Reynolds. The machine was swallowed up in the big cavity.

Reynolds was arrested at the scene on a charge of drunkenness. His auto was later dug out by a crew of 25 men, who worked many hours to repair the damage.

Residents of Cabot st. and some of the business concerns in Merrimack st. were without water during the entire day on account of the break.

FRANCE EAGER TO TALK DEBT

Paris, Sept. 9 (AP)—Information received in French diplomatic circles from London today said Great Britain expects to base further war debts discussions with the American administration on a suggestion to pay 10 per cent of the amount owed.

It was learned authoritatively that France wants to negotiate on the same basis, which corresponds to the reduction in reparations from Germany as agreed upon at Lausanne last year.

The French government is eager to discuss the war debt, even though the situation has not changed since June 15 when Parliament went on record as indicating there must be a drastic reduction.

While the government is known to be anxious to get the problem adjusted, it feels it must wait for an invitation from Washington to negotiate. Thus far no such bid has been forthcoming.

French people in general, officials say quite frankly, are against payment, but many business and political leaders are said to favor a "gesture" payment, thinking thereby to quiet American indignation and pave the way for better trade.

WOMAN JURIST SAYS TIME TO BUY IS NOW

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

Buy in September and save your money.

This was the keynote of the radio address of Judge Sadie Lipner Shulman, whose endorsement of the Hearst Buy in September-Buy American campaign is today listed along with countless others of Boston's most prominent women citizens.

Judge Shulman maintains that buying in September is wise economy and practical budgeting. In her talk she urged every woman to get behind the Hearst movement, sponsored as a stimulus to President Roosevelt's NRA program. She pointed out that by spending in September the buyer was helping not only others but himself, primarily.

Trade Boards Plan Parade Floats

Some of the most beautiful floats ever seen in Boston demonstrations will be shown in the NRA parade next Wednesday. Most of them will be presented by boards of trade from Dorchester, Roxbury, Jamaica Plain, East Boston, Roslindale, South Boston, and other suburban districts.

FIGHT FOR SURVIVAL

"Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and since we are all human, this law is one to which we all must adhere in our struggle for survival," she said.

"Therefore by subscribing to the Buy in September-Buy American campaign sponsored by the Hearst newspapers throughout the country, you will not only be helping countless others to get back on their feet, but primarily the person you will help most is YOU.

"For, patriotism to one side, each and every one is interested in making money. The surest and quickest way of making money now is to SPEND money now. Prices have been going up for several months and will continue to rise. Therefore your September dollar will buy more than your October dollar. Therefore in order to get the most for your money, you better turn your dollars into commodities immediately this month—without delay.

WISE ECONOMY

"Spending money in September is not extravagance; it is wise economy. It is practical budgeting. You will help to make jobs and give back needed employment to heads of families.

"You will help to take people off public welfare lists and help to put them back on payrolls, reestablishing self-respect for them, and renewed incentive in life."

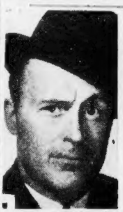
Mobile Road Would Continue Low Fares

The receiver of Mobile & Ohio Railroad has petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commisison to allow it to extend for an additional six months the I. C. C. order issued March 24 of this year permitting establishment and maintenance of a reduced basic passenger rates and fares and the elimination of Pullman surcharges for an experimental six months period.

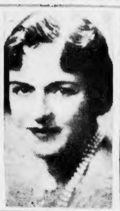
Marshall Field's Sales Take a Jump

Marshall Field & Co., retail concluded August with what was probably the biggest percentage increase over a year ago in the history of theb usiness. It was considerably greater than the 27½ per cent increase shown in July compared with 1932.

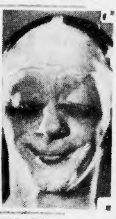
LOOK--THINK--NAME THEM



13—Musical comedy and vaudeville dancing star whose latest invention, the "Mahoney-phone," is the last word in originality. He dances on the xylophone. Recognize him?



14—Vaudeville singer made famous by records, well known in musical comedy, also on the radio. She offers modern interpretation of song stories. Who is she?



15—The beloved clown, famous both here and abroad, also featured in many shows and now in RKO vaudeville. He has made thousands laugh. Do you know him?

All Boston American readers have an opportunity to win $100 in cash and 100 tickets to the RKO Keith-Boston Theatre in the vaudeville identification test being sponsored by the Boston Evening American and the RKO Keith-Boston Theatre.

Three celebrated vaudeville stars of the RKO circuit are printed each day with definite hints as to their identity. All you have to do is name them correctly, save all your pictures until the end of the contest and then mail them to the RKO Vaudeville Editor, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop Square, Boston.

The first prize will be $25 in cash, second prize $10, the next two prizes $5 each and $2 bills for each of the next 20 winners. The next 50 winners will receive two passes to the Keith-Boston Theatre, home of RKO vaudeville. In case of a tie neatness will count. The decision of the judges will be final.

VETS PREPARE FOR PARADE ON BUY DAY

They swung into line in '17, those glorious vets, when President Wilson hurled the challenge that America would make the world safe for democracy.

Those same doughboys, rotund and aging now, are going "over the top" again. This time it is a peace time zero hour. The day is Wednesday.

GIVE HEARTY APPROVAL

The Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion posts and their bands have heartily endorsed the NRA drive for prosperity.

They are going to be very much in evidence next Wednesday when NRA Buy Day will be observed by Boston.

Strutting with the same peppy tempo they used in the war-scarred fields of France, they will do their part to make the day a success.

"They shall not pass," their war time slogan, will changed to "Buy in September and Buy American."

AUXILIARIES IN STEP

Not to be outdone by the male contingents, the American Legion and F. F. W. auxiliaries were making their gorgeous capes and dresses resplendent for the occasion.

Hundreds from all over Greater Boston have signified they will take part. Many of the drill teams will be in line.

The Boston American and Sunday Advertiser urge those who are uncertain as to details to phone the NRA parade headquarters, Liberty 4000, for definite instructions.

Tomorrow and Monday details on formation of the parade and other particulars will be published in the Sunday Advertiser and in the Evening American.

Dewey's Band for Provincetown Trips

The newest of band sensations, Tom and Bud Dewey and their Pennsylvanians, will supply dance music on the regular Provincetown trips, aboard the S. S. Dorothy Bradford, starting tonight and for the remainder of the season, according to an announcement by Paul Thurlow.

Paul Thurlow

Organized six years ago by University of Pennsylvania students, the Dewey brothers and their group of musicians have constantly gained in popularity.

The Pennsylvanians come to the steamer Bradford direct from a summer engagement at the Bay of Naples Country Club and will entertain on those popular Saturday night whoopee cruises.

BUYING MEANS SAVING

Judge Sadie Lipner Shulman endorsed the Buy in September—Buy American campaign, sponsored by Hearst newspapers, last night over the air from Station WAAB as a means for housewives to save money and at the same time aid greatly in furthering the success of the National Recovery Act. You may be riding on any of the amusements and just put your hand down between the seat or under it and find an envelope. Again one might be under your feet or slipped into your pocket. They might even come flying from up over head. That is what happend last Sunday at Paragon Park.

So don't forget today is the day to clip your Treasure Hunting certificates out of the Boston Evening American.

The hunt starts at noon and continues throughout the remainder of the day and evening. Should you find an envelope with a Treasure coupon, take it with the Treasure Hunt Certificate in the Boston American today and go right to the Administration Building in Paragon Park and cash it.

BAR HEAD WILL FIGHT COAKLEY

From the very source that brought his disbarment in 1932, opposition to the reinstatement of Daniel H. Coakley to the Massachusetts bar opened today within a few hours after Coakley's plea in Supreme Court.

The first statement against Coakley's return to practice came from Robert G. Dodge, now president of the Boston Bar Association, the prosecuting attorney who handled the Coakley complaint for the association in 1922.

"I shall certainly oppose the reinstatement of Daniel H. Coakley because the court ruled in his disbarment that he is not a fit person to practice law in this state," said Atty. Dodge.

"It is very unusual," he added, "for a disbarred lawyer to apply for reinstatement. In view of the evidence presented at his disbarment proceedings, and many other features of the case, I shall oppose his reinstatement."

Victory Buying Days for Every City and Town

A campaign for intelligent and discriminating buying was being planned at the headquarters of the Massachusetts State Recovery Board of the NRA today, as Boston stores reported increased business.

Miss Mary Ward, chairman of the women's division for Massachusetts, announced that Victory Buying Days will be staged in every city and town in the state with the co-operation of the merchants as soon as the consumers' drive is ended.

"By the time our September 20 National Buying Day has rolled around," she said, "Massachusetts women will be ready to continue buying steadily and intelligently, not only for the benefits they themselves feel, but to help the entire country."

A report from the Boston Retail Trade Board revealed that actual dollar sales of more than 30 retail stores were 22.1 per cent greater for the month of August than a year ago.

The figures also showed that the dollar sales of these stores for the week of Aug. 28 through Sept. 5 were 24.1 per cent greater than past week showed even a greatfor the corresponding week in 1932. In addition, the sales of the er increase over last year than the 22 per cent gain for the week ending Aug. 26.

Reports of progress from other parts of New England were also received at NRA headquarters, together with the announcement of the settlement of the strike at the Ponemah Mills at Taftsville, Ct., through the local NRA board of mediation. The strike had been going on several weeks. ers, has been eliminated.

The total number of new agreements signed in New England yesterday was 1971, affecting 28,066 employees. The grand total is now 125,025 agreements placing 1,030,141 employees under the code provisions.

BUY MOVEMENT PRAISED BY ATTORNEY

Atty. Robert Gallagher has endorsed the Boston American's "Buy in September and Buy American" movement, whose object is to put additional thousands of the unemployed back to work.

Mr. Gallagher, who has appeared as counsel in many outstanding lawsuits, in praising the American's "Buy" movement, said:

"I think the 'Buy in September and Buy American' movement of the Boston American and allied Hearst newspapers is one of the most constructive connected with the effort now being made throughout the nation to get the unemployed of this country back to work and contentment.

"If the thousands of persons who have already returned to work as a result of the constructive NRA campaign of the Democratic administration will spend their earnings instead of boarding, thousands more will be put back to work, thus creating additional buying power. The proposition is endless, like a circle.

"The purpose behind the NRA movement was to cause an expansion of buying power. That objective having been reached through shortening of hours of employment, increases in salaries and addition of many workers, it now remains for the workers themselves to put on the finishing touches by buying what they and their families need now or will need in the near future.

"I wish to congratulate Mr. Hearst on his far-sightedness in starting this movement to buy this month and to buy American made merchandise."

Buy Day Parade Office Opens

Patriotic, civic, military, fraternal and business organizations, wishing to take part in the Boston "Over the Top" parade on "NRA BUY DAY," next Wednesday, Sept. 13, at 3 p. m., can secure full information by calling "NRA Buy Day" headquarters, Liberty 4000, or by visiting the parade headquarters at 294 Devonshire st.

Parade headquarters will be open all day today, Sunday and next week.

had too easy a time, discovered that feet need guidance.

General Johnson, of NRA, watches closely the working of the coal miners' code for good reasons. Of all industries, coal has been most seriously and persistently disturbed by strikes and lockouts.

If NRA can make that code work, others will work.

Grover Whalen, who runs New York NRA, with a smile that never dies, has settled two garment workers' strikes, which is as near to performing a miracle as he can ever expect to come.

Garment making is a seasonal trade, with months of idleness each year, plenty of leisure for workers, usually earnest and excitable men and women, to think up new plans for "throwing off their chains" and getting better pay.

American labor unions are urged to join and co-operate with the international labor unions of the world. American labor leaders have hitherto preferred to go it alone, and it is to be hoped they will continue that policy, if, in the end, it turns out that NRA is to make organized labor practical dictator of industry and commerce in the United States with the "collective bargaining" clause meaning ultimately "no open shop."

Government NRA authorities may easily control or coerce individual industrialists, with much at stake, and public condemnation to fear. They can hardly control, against their will, millions of workers, assured by fervent orators that they have "nothing to lose but their chains."

Scientists in Yellowstone Park will try to answer.

Do the young bears, less than a year old, nurse their mothers while they hibernate? How do the bears manage all?

Buddhist priests in Thibet are said to practice hibernation to a limited extent and perform other marvels of endurance. See "Magic and Mystery in Thibet," by Alexandria David Neel.

It is alleged the Thibetan priests cause their bodies to produce heat, by some esoteric mental process. In the dead of winter, at night, by the edge of a frozen lake or river, in competition, the Yogis, stark naked, sit on the ground while cotton cloths, dipped in cold water through a hole in the ice, are wrapped around them. When the cloth is dried, by the boy's heat, it is taken off and another wet applied. One Yogi is said to have supplied enough heat to dry 40 such ice cold cloths and was warm at the end.

But perhaps it is not so.

This government recognizes the dollar slump, officially, by fixing the price of gold at $29.62 in our money. The idea is to let American gold producers get for their metal the "world price" in dollars, less the cost of handling, exporting, etc. Good news for the gold mine men.

Not content with driving out Professor Einstein, who did so much for the glory of German science, certain Hitler followers seem inclined to "honor" their Swastika emblem by bringing about Professor Einstein's death.

Following an alleged cash reward for Einstein's murder, Belgian police placed a guard around his suburban house. Now it is reported "Nazis have been concentrating near the Einstein villa" and Einstein will flee from Belgium, going to South America on a friend's yacht.

Queer way to obtain honor, by murdering one of the world's greatest scientists.

Do Not Neglect Eruptions of Skin

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

RECENTLY I told you about a number of disturbances of the skin and how they could be prevented and cured. Today I want to tell you about another affliction of the skin, the cause of which is not known. I refer to the disease called "eczema," which is one of the most obstinate of skin disorders and extremely difficult to cure.

Dr. Copeland

Eczema is most commonly found in infants and growing children, but it is occasionally encountered in adults. Infants who suffer from this disagreeable affliction are a pathetic sight.

Great advances have been made in the treatment of this unpleasant disease but, as I said, the underlying cause of the disorder has not as yet been discovered. It is more commonly found in infants who are bottle-fed, and is rarely encountered in children who are breast-fed. The disorder is believed to accompany some disturbance in digestion. There are authorities who think it is due to a peculiar type of sensitivity to certain foods in the diet of the sufferer.

Bear in mind that even though eczema is a difficult disease to cure, it has been cured and can be cured. This is made possible only by careful study of the diet and the personal supervision of a physician. Too often the mother in her zealous attempts to cure her child resorts to the use of patent medicines and many salves recommended to her by well-meaning neighbors.

I want to impress upon you that a salve which is beneficial to one child may be irritative to another child. Skins vary in texture. Some are more sensitive than others. One medicine may prove to be mild for one person, but too strong for another.

I am often asked by anxious mothers whether eczema is a contagious disease. Children often are humiliated and embarrassed when they notice that other children avoid them. There is no need for this because eczema is not contagious and cannot be transmitted from one child to another.

In older children eczema has been cured by the removal of localized infection somewhere in the body, such as diseased tonsils and adenoids. In others, when faulty elimination has been corrected this has led to the cure of the skin affliction. It is essential that the child receive a thorough physical examination in an effort to determing the underlying cause.

Do not neglect eczema or any other inflammation of the skin. Consult your physician immediately. Neglect may lead to a cronic disease which is even more difficult to cure.

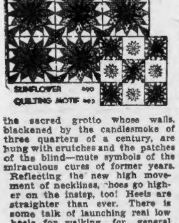
Curtain Motifs

—By Laura Wheeler—

This year, as in the past, cripples will be carried to the shrine in beds and in wheelchairs, or in the arms of their friends. Thousands of these unfortunates, for whom science has been able to do nothing, will seek relief through faith. A constant throng, a steady stream of afflicted pilgrims, praying in every language of the civilized world, move down the mountain to the sacred spot. Down the mountain they come, assisted by friends, relatives or the able-bodied faithful. Their goal is the sacred grotto whose walls, blackened by the candlesmoke of three quarters of a century, are hung with crutches and the patches of the blind—mute symbols of the miraculous cures of former years.



Reflecting the new high movement of necklines, shoes go higher on the instep, too! Heels are straighter than ever. There is some talk of launching real low heels for walking, for general use. Very fashionable women are already seen following this decree.

These are often delicate and expensive. Monograms and initials, broad and modern, are in high style again.

As you can see by these descriptions, the fashion for feather ornaments continues. However, when used with restraint, as in these examples, it proves to be a charming idea.

the street. Simplicity is a byword more important than ever. Every formal types bag look to ornaments for elaboration.

Plan Would Cripple Fixers

The Judges of the District Court of Massachusetts appeared before a recess Committee of the Legislature and explained how they can or can not effect economies that will save money to the taxpayers.

In our opinion, the people of Massachusetts are less concerned in effecting economy in their judicial system than they are in seeing even justice dispensed of the character that is guaranteed by the fine Constitution of Massachusetts.

They are more concerned in seeing practical justice for all the public.

They are more concerned in seeing the Courts freed from the reputation of being a racket for fixit lawyers, ambulance chasers, professional bondsmen, influential politicians and the other insiders who constitute the evil courthouse gangs and cliques.

The people of Massachusetts have come to believe that all too often you can get "justice" only if you see a friend of the judge, or the politician who was responsible for his appointment or some other chiseler who exerts an influence in the Courts that the Constitution never intended.

Some of the Courts are notorious in their reputation. The Judges are appointed for life and they can not be removed unless they are caught with the goods. They sit in the same courtroom day after day. They are not so strong in human nature that they can resist forever the influence of the practical hangerson who surround them daily. Their decisions are "sold" to litigants by these professional schemers who pretend to have influence with the Judges whether they possess such influence or not.

These schemers and chiselers have built a nuisance value for themselves, and it should be said in justice to most of the Judges, that this nuisance value has been erected without the knowledge or consent of the most of the Judges themselves.

In any event, the judges ought to be moved around. There ought to be a circuit for the judges in Greater Boston and for the judges in the other localities of Massachusetts. They ought not to sit forever in one court. They ought to be moved to new scenes where the courthouse gangs could not capitalize any allegedly familiarity with them.

The change to new scenes would be better for the reputation and the temper of some of the judges. Surely it could not harm the even-handed, unprejudiced justice which the framers of the Constitution intended.

Teachers on Strike
Many Schools May Be Closed

The Federal Government moved none too quickly in providing that a portion of its emergency employment funds may be made available for the payment of relief salaries to teachers in order to keep some of the nation's schools going in the poorer districts this next term.

Apart from Chicago's colossal crisis there is continually increasing evidence that the predicted total breakdown in education is dangerously near.

At present Pennsylvania State officials are coping with a teachers' strike at Old Forge. These teachers have refused to begin the new school year unless a part of their overdue salaries for last year is paid. Consequently, 4000 youngsters reporting for their lessons had to be sent home for lack of teachers on duty—and Pennsylvania is threatened with a spread of the movement that may close many schools.

Nobody can deny that unpaid teachers have more than a just complaint. With those at Old Forge everybody must sympathize.

But a teachers' strike—that is a bad symptom, very bad indeed.

Calvin Cooldge said of the Boston police strike that nobody has any right to strike against the public safety any time, anywhere.

The same words might be used with reference to education by way of rebuking the striking teachers.

But when that is done what must be said of the legislators and of the petty political officials in State after State whose misgovernment and wrong-headed methods of false economy have so endangered the spirit and the uninterrupted existence of America's most important and most necessary institution—the public school?

The Elks' Foundation
It Plans Much for Many

Walter F. Meier of Seattle marked his first visit to Boston as Grand Exalted Ruler of the Elks by contributing $1000 to the Elks' National Foundation.

This fund now amounts to $350,000 in cash, with pledges that will bring its total to $750,000.

Scholarships are given from the fund to worthy young men in search of the higher education they could not afford. Donations are made from it to hospitals and to institutions which care for crippled children. An old age fund is being created out of it to save indigent old folks from hardships in their declining years.

It is interesting to know that this national fund is administered by John F. Malley of Boston, whose reputation in the social and political life of the State is excellent.

The Elks are a popular fraternal society. Good fellowship abounds among them and they exude happiness. In the case of the Elks National Foundation, they show they are not disposed to confine their benevolence to their own members. This is one of the many reasons they are held so favorably in popular estimation.

The Child in the House

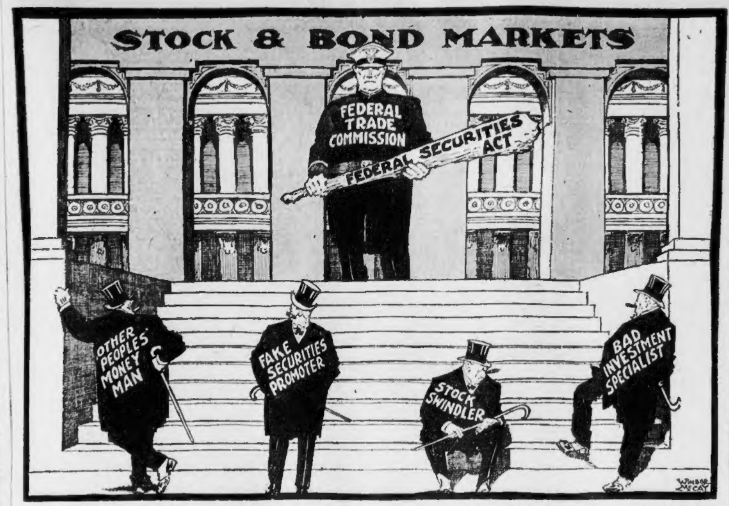
We learn from one of Gobind Behari Lal's Chicago dispatches that scientists are now able to give a child five years old a psychological test and thereby "get a pretty good idea whether or not that child would be bright."

We doubt if the news will appeal to very many parents.

Pick out a bright child? Ever since families began, fond papas and overfond mamas have been doing that in their own households—and not waiting until the child is five years of age, either. In fact, one of the earliest discoveries every parent makes is that his or her own child is invariably bright—no matter what jealous neighbors may think.

The psychologists should pause. They should reflect on what happens occasionally to baby show judges before they undertake the hazardous task of telling parents whose child is bright and why.

Barred Out



Among the measures advocated by the Hearst newspapers and enacted at the emergency session of Congress was the Federal Securities Act.

There were two purposes behind this legislation.

One was to assist the nation's economic recovery by helping to restore public confidence in sound enterprises.

The other and broader purpose was to prevent unscrupulous exploitation of investors, when prosperity shall have returned, by "enforcement of the truth."

To these ends the Federal Trade Commission has been given jurisdiction. The issuers of prospective securities are required to file their proposals and their sales literature with the commission. If the offering is worthy and the sponsors are honest in their statements they may proceed.

If not, the Federal Trade Commission may forbid the sale of the securities by a "stop order."

Only five times since the law became operative has the commission put forth a "stop order." That many "propositions" have been kept off the market by governmental intervention.

BUT twenty-four others have been filed and withdrawn—either to avoid a "stop order" or to revise the plans.

Out of 157 issues submitted in two months, with a total value of $180,000,000, 104 have been found acceptable and made available to purchasers.

For the first time the business of using other people's money is being properly policed by a law with "teeth in it."

New York Day by Day

If He Could Be Re-born!

NEW YORK, Sept. 9—From midnight until dawn I sat in the salon d'attente reserved for expectant fathers, in a New York maternity hospital. While I soaked up some of the tension of the new parent, who inhaled four packages of cigarettes furiously, mostly my mind was far away.

O. O. McIntyre

Waiting in a crisis, thoughts scatter like bubbles in the wind. I thought how much an erect gentleman near the door, taut as a fiddle string, looked like Charles G. Norris and I thought how much my life would alter were I born again. One thing certain—I would prefer re-birth in a small town.

I would regret missing that period of sitting on the front porch in the hazy twilight of a summer evening. This phase of family communion is almost gone. How contagious the serenity of trees in sleppy whisper! A dreamy link with an allurring peace so Tennysonian.

What I have missed most in the city is the calm of dusk, the queer whorl of arabesques as night paints a black-out. Instead of the low cadence of crickets, the fierce huzzah of traffic. Instead of fire-flies, the garish zig-zag of enormous electric beacons. I shall always miss the splendor of rural sunsets.

Somewhere I have read in a rich anthology of life that no one, living 20 years in a small town, is ever completely happy in a city. I lacked two years of 20 in the hills, but I subscribe to that. The same rule applies to the city bred who migrate to smaller communities. All of which doubtless counts for the sociological fact the most supremely happy people are those who live and die where born.

* * *

But about being born again. I'd like to be far handsomer. Somewhere midway between Jack Buchanon and Warren Williams would do. A pair of shoulders like Herb Roth's might help. They could leave me my ears. They are rather dandy. I would attend a fresh-water college. I've always had a leaning toward Wbash. Newspaper work would be my choice and the Kansas City Star my first hope.

Assuredly I would never use tobacco. Of all Life's naggers, Nicotine is the most relentless. I would not start girling until about 21. Then I would make it hum and marry, as I did, at 24. I'd learn one language other than my own perfectly. French preferably and Spanish second choice. From knee-high to a duck up to and including the doddering age I'd have dogs around. As one of life's indefatigable vessers I would learn to say "No" with the click of a roulette ball.

I'd like to have the same friends. Not one ever failed me. I've heard of double-crossing, but no one I catalogued as friend ever has. I run counter to ordinary existence consistently in but one way. I refuse to be an early bird. And that goes double were I born again. The rest of the world can have from 6 to 11 a. m. I'll take night—and a hamburger on rye! Fine music is one of the most magnificent of earth's generosities and I sincerely regret I did not acquire early love for it.

* * *

Among lesser accomplishments of life's monotonous tic-toc, I'd like to wear a hat like Clive Brook's, write of the trivial as engagingly as Robert Louis Stevenson, gurgle airy persiflage like Noel Coward, fill a room with electric excitement upon entering it in the manner of Floyd Gibbons, sport a breast pocket handkerchief like Aubrey Eads and be as boisterously breezy as Lee Tracy.

Dietetics, I believe, play important part in human tranquility. A light breakfast, no lunch and what Arnold Bennett calls a largish dinner is my idea. One sometimes has to live 40 years to become current to the glow of calling on the sick and encouraging the struggler up. And sometimes even longer to learn the poisonous futility of hate. Born again, I'd never contract a single debt. Not because of any particular conscience twinge. But because perpetual debt tears down something one can never build up.

At 5:30 a. m. a coolly competent nurse announced a 7-pound boy. Unconsciously during the racking wait, I was mapping out a life for him. In my zeal I had forgotten the simple rule that will make the lively newcomer happier than advice of all the sages. A trite little thing, it runs like this: "Mind your own business!"

Listen, World!
By Elsie Robinson

Are Women "Equal"?

MISS CORNELIA HILL says I shouldn't have claimed that "American women have equal rights and opportunities with men"—and sends me some startling laws to prove I'm wrong.

Elsie Robinson

I didn't say they had equal LEGAL rights, lady. But they do have equal HUMAN rights, if they want to use them. Meaning what? Meaning the right to stand on their own hind legs and raise Cain, if they don't like the breaks they're getting.

And I still maintain that most of the "injustice" which we women are suffering now, and have always suffered, is due not so much to masculine inhumanity, but to our own laziness, stupidity, frivolity, cowardice, general cussedness and conceit. And we could have had a better deal, any time, if we'd been willing to pay the price for it.

However, that doesn't mean that I approve of the conditions under which women are still forced to function or am not doing my humble bit to better them. And, to prove it, I'm going to print part of the broadcast which the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs has compiled, and which Mrs. Hill has forwarded to me.

You "don't like women's clubs?" What of it? This stuff is straight, no matter who compiled it. And will you not be proud of your Big Wonderful Progressive Country when you read it? Yes, you will NOT! Listen!

"Do you know that in Oklahoma women are barred by law from holding any of the higher elective offices?

"Do you know that before Mrs. Ferguson was inducted into office as the first woman governor of Texas, she petitioned the court to set aside her 'legal disabilities as a married woman,' in order that contracts entered into by her on behalf of the state might not be questioned?

"DO YOU KNOW WHAT THE LEGAL PHRASE 'DISABILITIES OF A MARRIED WOMAN' MEANS?

"That in many states it means married women, in the same way as criminals, children, and the insane, are limited in their right to contract?

"That this classes large groups of women as legally and financially irresponsible, and handicaps them in the legitimate transaction of their property and business?

"DO YOU KNOW HOW MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY RIGHTS ARE RESTRICTED?

"That in Florida the husband can manage and control his wife's separate property?

"That in Louisiana only the husband is privileged to manage and dispose of the husband's and wife's joint property?

"That in Michigan, though the wife paid for property held jointly by husband and wife, the husband has the sole right to the rents and profits?

"That in South Carolina even a woman's clothes are held to be the property of her husband?

"DO YOU KNOW THAT THE WIFE'S EARNINGS MAY BE THE HUSBAND'S PROPERTY?

"That in Georgia the records are full of cases where the husband has availed himself of his right to his wife's earnings?

"That in New York state the earnings of a wife secured from labor under her husband's roof from sewing, nursing or keeping boarders belong to her husband?

"DO YOU KNOW HOW INSECURE ARE THE RIGHTS OF MOTHERS TO THEIR CHILDREN?

"That the father is sole natural guardian of minor children in Alabama, Arizona and Texas? That in Georgia it is legally possible for a father to will away the custody of his children from the mother?

"That Michigan, New York and Massachusetts are among the states where the father alone is entitled to the services and earnings of the children?

"DO YOU KNOW THAT THE BURDEN OF ILLEGITIMATE PARENTHOOD RESTS ON THE MOTHER?

"That in some states, as Virginia and Texas, there are no laws by which the unmarried mother may demand aid from the father for support of the child?

"DO YOU KNOW THAT IN MORE THAN HALF THE STATES WOMEN ARE DENIED THE RIGHT TO SERVE ON JURIES?

"DO YOU KNOW THAT THERE IS NOT A SINGLE STATE IN THE UNION WHERE MEN AND WOMEN LIVE UNDER EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAW?"

And you haven't heard the half! So now YOU think—what?

Future Growth

He who doubts the future doubts the past
And beaten is before the struggle starts.
Tomorrow is the field for fighting hearts,
A scene unlighted now but wide and vast
Where men in splendid roles shall soon be cast
Many remember when men rode in carts

Tomorrow holds adventure for us all,
Where now we see but dimly skies shall clear.
No man can tell what next old fact shall fall
Nor what discovery mark the coming year,
But from the past this truth we can recall
Growth and achievement mark men's journey here.

U. S. Cannot Shirk Task In Aiding Cuba
By James T. Williams, Jr.

Conditions in Cuba today present a challenge to American authority and responsibility that cannot be denied under the law and ought not to be shirked before the world.

Constitutional government of Cuba has been overthrown. It is too early to forecast the result of this overthrow. At best it means delay in the recognition by the United States and other governments of the revolutionists who have seized power.

This delay will add to the instability, uncertainty and confusion of the Cuban people themselves. It will add also to the anxiety of foreign governments regarding the lives and property of their nationals in Cuba.

These foreign governments will look to the United States to protect not only the rights of its own nationals, but the rights of the nationals of other governments, in case the revolutionary outfit which has overthrown the provisional government either will not or cannot organize a government worthy the name.

ARMED INTERVENTION

However much the Roosevelt administration may hope that developments in Cuba will not compel armed intervention by the United States, the administration cannot withhold such intervention unless Cuba gets a government of the sort that the Platt amendment guarantees.

The Platt amendment was embodied in the Cuban constitution on June 12, 1901. It was also made the basis of the permanent treaty between Cuba and the United States.

Cuba consents under the Platt amendment "that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris upon the United States."

The new revoluntionary rulers of Cuba have proclaimed the nullification of the Constitution of 1901. This does not repeal the Platt amendment. All the rights and obligations which the Platt amendment gives to the United States remain in force. No President of the United States and no revolutionary rulers of Cuba can renounce or repeal either these rights or these responsibilities.

Thus far the Roosevelt administration in dealing with Cuba has proceeded upon the theory that it was serving as a mediator and was not resorting to intervention. Obviously many Cubans do not subscribe to this theory. It is a question whether foreign governments subscribe to this theory.

RECORD SHOWS

The record shows that the Machado government was overthrown and a provisional government installed in its place while the American ambassador, in the nominal role of mediator, was in constant consultation with the leaders demanding the overthrow of the Machado government and the leaders who took part in the installation of the provisional government which has just been overthrown.

The record also shows that American warships were sent to Havana last month as soon as the Machado government had been overthrown and that they remained in Cuban waters until it appeared that the provisional government would be generally accepted.

Whether the United States resorted to intervention or only mediation when its efforts were rewarded by the overthrow of the government and the setting up of a provisional government approved by the United States is for the moment an academic question.

The question before the Roosevelt administration is how it can best discharge the stern responsibility assumed by the United States under the Platt amendment which makes this country the guarantor of "the preservation of Cuban independence," and the maintenance of a government in Cuba "adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty."

If this responsibility can only be discharged by armed intervention, then the Roosevelt administration has no choice in the matter. It is only the servant of the law—the law of the Platt amendment—and the law is the master of the situation.

Human Side of the News
By Edwin C. Hill

The terrors of the sea are in the news again—the crocodile, the caribe and the shark. From Venezuela comes the report of the heroism of a 14-year-old boy who fought gallantly, if vainly, to save two other boys from the jaws of a crocodile, his only weapon the paddle of a canoe.

Abel Prager and Jose Lujo, 10-year-olds, were bathing off the city of San Fernando Apure. Ramon Eloy was paddling nearby when he saw Abel swimming directly into the jaws of the crocodile which had been lying idly in the water, pretty much like a log. Ramon arrived just as the monster seized Abel. He beat furiously upon its head with the paddle until it released its victim. Jose swam to the rescue and the two game youngsters were assisting Abel to shore when the crocodile seized Jose from under the water.

Dragging Abel ashore, Ramon rushed again to the rescue. Once more he beat off the crocodile, but by this time the caribes, tiny man-eating fish, had scented the blood and arrived to complete the deadly work.

These caribes, also called piranhas, were reported by Theodore Roosevelt when he came back from his exploration of the River of Doubt. They are about the fiercest and most voracious things alive, when you consider they run less than a foot in size. But they have teeth which cut off flesh like a scissors from man, beast or fish.

The shark experience came to a party which included the motion picture actress Ann Harding during a sail in the waters near Havana. The boat was disabled and a Cuban boatman undertook to swim to shore—with that native indifference to sharks which no doubt gives rise to the conviction which many tourists hold that sharks don't attack swimmers in motion, or that they seem to be able to differentiate between natives and strangers. Such was not the case in this instance, and the boatman became their prey.

This controversy about man-eating sharks is a perennial. When it came up recently John Chapman Hilder, writing in Popular Science Monthly, told of a case in Florida when a young man sighting a shark cried, "They don't attack men," and dived onto the back of the bullhead. He lost an arm before his companions could drive off the monster.

An entirely different story comes from Mouafoo, an island in the Tonga group in the Southern Pacific. For 11 years G. S. Ramsay, an Australian, swam out to the mail ship on its weekly visit and the sharks swam alongside of him. "They always seemed playful. They never bothered me," said Ramsay on his retirement from the unique job. But, to complete the record, let it be said that the native who succeeded Ramsay was eaten by those same sharks, and now a boat goes out for the mail.

For a real authority on sharks one has to go to J. E. Williamson, the pioneer submarine photographer, who years ago filmed the motion picture, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," in which Jane Gail was the star. From the deck of a burning yacht Miss Gail dived into the sea, off Nassau, in the Bahamas, a sea alive with sharks and barracuda. Here is a man who can tell you how it feels to be whipped from boat by the tail of a shark, to land on that shark's back, to be carried down beneath the waves and to live to tell the tale.

Another time and the adventurous Williamson went out to get his shark in the native fashion. With his body oiled and a knife held in his teeth he dived from the boat the instant he sighted the shark. Taking hold of the stiff pectoral fin of the mammal he plunged the knife to the hilt into the white underbody. Fortunately, as he says himself, he did the task perfectly and Mr. Shark was a dead one.

Williamson has told the breathtaking story of a study he made of sharks on the ocean floor one mile deep in the Caribbean sea. He was down in his diving tube, a three-ton affair with a five-foot glass window. A school of sharks was lured to the spot by fifty gallons of animal blood pumped into the water. They came bumping head on against the glass. Ravenous with hunger and savage with rage against the intruder, they launched themselves like living hammers against the thin glass partition which separated Williamson from a dreadful death.

Within minutes they would have broken through the glass plates had not the adventurer acted swiftly. He sent up a signal for an assistant to lower a hook baited with a great hunk of meat. Down it came, rapidly, though it seemed ages to Williamson, and as it hove in sight of the little, beady eyes of the monsters of the deep, they turned from the prey they had set upon to fight for the meat.

While the battle was on, while twenty-foot sharks were rending each other to bloody shreds, Williamson's assistant drew him to the top, out of that abode of horrors, leaving the demons to their savage work.
